PRESIDENT COOLIDGE, eulogizing America's great industries, says: "The rattle of the reaper, the buzz of the saw, the clang of the anvil, the roar of traffic are all part of a mighty symphony, not only of material but of spiritual progress."

There has been improvement since Pharoah built the great pyramid and since Saint James wrote his bitter denunciation, "Go to now, yet rich men weep and howl for your miseries that shall come upon you."

PAYROLLS are regular and bigger. Scarcity of labor makes employers realize the value of men as well as machinery. Public opinion has helped and some employers plan to make workers happy, for the sake of making them happy, not merely because it pays.

BUT the millennium is not here. The average great industrialist thinks of his men as he thinks of other machines. He owes that to his stockholders. If a rich man proved that to make 100,000 men independently well off would please him more than making $100,000,000 for himself, he would be classed among "cranks," as were those that freed their slaves before Lincoln.

FORTUNATELY civilization is a steady growth and decency grows with it. A baby's empty mouth grows a full set of teeth, no thanks to the baby. And our industrial feudalism, safer, richer, more intelligent than the military feudalism it replaces, grows and produces better conditions, no thanks to individuals.

About their real work, they know and care as little as the tiny creatures that built the coral islands, or worms that chewing and wriggling in utter selfishness produced the fertile soil. But that is no reason for refusing gratitude to those worms.

VIRTUOUS, mildly rebellious wives of Chicopee, Mass., prepared ten commandments for husbands and show that they do not understand the problem of husbands or marriage. It is useless to talk about details, including the double standard of morals.

The problem is in two words, SYMPATHY AND JUSTICE.

If a man is sympathetic and just, he will try to do what he ought to do. His success will depend on his age and his degree of semi-civilization.

MEN, once as imperfect as the higher apes, are slowly improving, and marriage is their training school. Wives know it, and prepare their matrimonial decalogues chiefly for amusement.

It interests them to think what

Ruth Lands; Going on To Paris

HORTA, The Azores, Oct. 15.—Miss Ruth Elder and Georg Haldeman arrived here early today aboard the Duth oil tanker Barendrecht, which rescued them at sea when their plane, American Girl, was forced down, due to a broken oil feed.

Miss Elder and Haldeman expect to leave on Monday on the Portuguese steamer Lima for Lisbon and then take a train for Paris.

The Barendrecht docked at 8 a. m. Miss Elder and Haldeman were well and appeared rested.

They explained that they came down approximately 280 miles Northwest of the Island of Fayal, one of the Azores, due principally to the failure of the pressure pump on their plane.

Highest officialdom of the islands, thousands of residents and even peasants from far back in the hills were on hand at the quay when the Barendrecht steamed into port.

Also on hand to meet the daring girl flyer was another of her sex who has gone in for aviation on a transatlantic scale. This was Lillie Dillenz, the Viennese actress, who has covered 900 miles of her transoceanic flight from Europe to the United States as a passenger on the Junkers plane.

Rain fell in torrents while the Barendrecht was docking.

The civil governor, the British and Dutch consuls and officials of the American cable companies went on board to greet Miss Elder and the pilot of her machine.

Miss Elder estimated that the distance flown was approximately 2,600 miles.

When Miss Elder came ashore from the boat she wore a leather jacket and plus fours. She said that she and Haldeman were on board the Barendrecht within 15 minutes after the vessel had been sighted.

They were disappointed over the loss of their plane, but this disappointment was nothing compared with their joy at being rescued.

The plane landed all right and was in good condition except for the broken oil feed and a hot motor.

An attempt was made to save the machine. Ropes were lowered from a freight derrick and were made fast to the disabled plane. The engine began to hoist away and the plane rose from the water, bumping against the side of the tanker. In a moment there was an explosion, a burst of flame and then the plane was afire. The blazing remnants were dropped back into the water.

On account of an accumulated amount of gasoline on the deck of the Barendrecht, the skipper got his ship away from the flaming wreckage as soon as possibile.

Both Miss Elder and the pilot, George Haldeman, were on deck when the officials got aboard.

Miss Elder spoke a few words, saying she was overjoyed with the public interest in her adventure and that she was so overwhelmed by cablegrams and radiograms that she could not attempt to answer all of them.

Both Miss Elder and Haldeman appeared in good health and spirits. Miss Elder, in particular, was bronzed by sun and wind.

Fog Blinds City; Cars Crash

A street car collision in which three persons were injured, minor automobile collisions and a freight train wreck occurred this morning while the heaviest fog of the season enveloped all sections of the county.

The street car collision occurred in Forbes street, near the Fern Hollow bridge. As a car of the Swissvale-Rankin-Braddock route in charge of Motorman W. Dill and Conductor A. Henderson was discharging passengers, another car in charge of Motorman H. Saulsbury and Conductor H. Reynert crashed into it.

The injured persons were in the rear of the first car. They were: P. J. Powers, 1614 Howe street, arm bruised; A. S. Klein, Jr., 844 Estella street, Beltzhoover, shoulder bruised; Antonio Zoagilozio, 186 Warrenton avenue, lip cut.

The first killing frost of the season at the same time cut short the outdoor crop of flowers and tender vegetables.

The fog blanket, railroad dispatchers reported, extended far in every direction, and early automobile drivers declared that it was as heavy on the hilltops as in the valleys.

A Baltimore and Ohio freight derailment at Valencia was the only railroad accident reported. Both tracks at the point were blocked for several hours when 14 cars of a fast freight left the rails and piled up at that point. Several passenger trains were rerouted over the Pittsburgh and Lake Erie Railroad tracks between McKeesport and New Castle.

The Pennsylvania Railroad reported a slight slowing up of early vehicles as they groped their ways morning trains, but no serious interruption of traffic.

The fog as an accompaniment of frost at this time of the year is an unusual occurrence, as the early frosts which kill vegetation usually are closely followed by clear weather.

Later by weeks than the usual period for killing frost, that of last night did no serious damage except to floral growths.

WEATHER MAP FURNISHED RUTH ELDER BEFORE FLIGHT AND HER INTENDED ROUTE

Ruth's Story Delayed

The first thrilling chapter of the personal story of Ruth Elder and George Haldeman, transatlantic fliers, today was held back by muted radios on the fog-swept Atlantic Ocean where conditions prevented its transmission for publication in The Sun-Telegraph.

The storm through which the plucky aviators battled for four hours before their forced descent thus served to offer its difficulties even after their rescue, but now that they have reached the Azores, their tale of that 30 hours over a seething sea as they fought the elements for a sight of France will be told for Sun-Telegraph readers as soon as they can communicate it.

HEAR MELLON HALTED PAYROLL "KICK-IN"

The proposal to levy campaign contributions from county and city employes was blocked by Republican State Chairman W. L. Mellon before it officially was put into effect, it was learned today.

At a meeting of Republican leaders early in the week the suggestion was made that the usual 2 per cent assessment be demanded from the jobholders. This suggestion was disapproved by the state chairman and plans for the levy were dropped.

As a result no "demands" or "requests" were initiated by the Republican headquarters, it was said today. Leaders there professed to be mystified as to the origin of the "requests" that led Mayor Kline to state, "I have issued instructions to department heads to countermand any request for campaign contributions from city employes."

Heads of both city and county departments, with one exception, have denied all knowledge of any "requests" or "demands" for campaign contributions. The exception is Director of Public Works Edward G. Lang, who said that some employes in his department had been asked to turn over 2 per cent of their salaries, that being the usual amount required when such levies were made in the past.

At the Republican headquarters it was made clear that while no general levy was being made that sizeable contributions are looked for from those holding the more lucra-

Chair Routs Shooting Bandits

Dodging bullets as he wielded a chair, Dr. G. W. Alvin, of 544 Paulson avenue, last night drove two armed bandits from the drug store of his brother, Larry Alvin, at 5508 Walnut street.

As a climax of the battle with the odds against him, Dr. Alvin hurled the chair through the rear window of the automobile in which the retreating bandits escaped. Three shots were fired by the bewildered holdup men as they backed from the store before the flailing chair. All went wild.

The holdup attempt occurred at midnight closing time, while the store proprietor was checking the day's receipts.

25 SAVED IN STEAMER COLLISION

By International News Service

NEW YORK, Oct. 15.—The French liner Paris, seventh largest vessel in the world, rammed the Norwegian freighter Besseggen, about a half mile south of the Statue of Liberty early today and sent her to the bottom in less than 30 minutes. The Paris was on her way down the harbor bound for Cherbourg.

Eight of tthe 33 persons aboard the freighter were missing after several hours of heroic rescue work by the crews of ferryboats, which rushed to the assistance of the stricken steamship when the siren of the Paris screamed for help. Twenty-five were saved.

The Paris left her pier at 1:30 a. m. as she proceeded down the main channel she picked up speed. Suddenly across her path the Besseggen loomed. It was too late to avoid a crash. The keen bow of the Paris clove the Norwegian vessel amidships, shivered and came to a stop.

Before boats could be launched the Besseggen went down by the stern, a few members of her crew clinging to the bow as it pointed skyward and disappeared.

Only those having ready access to the deck were able to get away at once. The "black gang"—stokers and engineers below—were trapped.

The ferry boat Brooklyn, southbound from the Battery to St. George, was the first vessel to reach the scene. On the orders of the captain, nearly all of the small crew were assigned to lifeboat duty, dropping boats overside and searching the waters with little to guide them in their rescue work but screams of the freighter's crew.

Mad excitement prevailed on the ferryboat in the meantime. Carrying a comparatively large number of passengers, the ferry was a scene of terror. Several women fainted. There were several fist fights among frantic men, who punched and clawed each other without reason.

In the meantime there arrived on the scene the American Legion, another ferry, and a Baltimore and Ohio tugboat. Additional boats were swung oversides and joined in the search for members of the freighter's crew.

TROLLEY HITS BUS TRAILER

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., Oct. 15.—Sixteen dead, five believed fatally injured and a score of others more or less seriously hurt, was the toll today of Indiana's most disastrous grade crossing accident.

The tragedy occurred last night shortly after 9 o'clock when a Union Traction interurban car, returning from Newcastle, Ind., smashed into a bus trailer carrying more than 60 members of the Sahara Grotto to a barn dance at Fort Benjamin Harrison.

The interurban car, said to be going 60 miles an hour, struck the crowded trailer at the Twenty-first street and Emerson avenue crossing, on the outskirts of Indianapolis.

The dead are: Mrs. R. P. Rhodes, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Meredith, Opal Merriman, Harold Welford, John Watson, Lee Merriman, Ralph Parker, Charles V. Wheeler, Von Weber Glasscock, William N. Hodges, Charles O. Poisel, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Dallas, Carl Jones and Mrs. Ada Jones.

Fourteen victims were killed outright. Robert Dallas and Mrs. Frank Meredith died several hours later in a local hospital. Several others of the more seriously injured are not expected to live.

All the victims lived in Indianapolis.

The demolished trailer was attached to a bus, also crowded with passengers. The bus had cleared the crossing, but the trailer was midway on the tracks when the speeding interurban crashed into it.

The front end of the interurban was demolished, but only the motorman and conductor were reported hurt.

The motorman, at the City Hospital, said he whistled for the crossing and didn't see the truck until he was about 40 feet from it.

One of the most pathetic survivors of the crash was Mrs. Von Glasscock, who lost five members of her family in the accident. She lost her husband, killed instantly; her sister, Opal Merriman; her brother, Lee Merriman, and her cousins, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Meredith. Mrs. Merriman, her sister-in-law, was seriously injured and may die.

Liquor War Victim Dies

The bootleggers' war claimed another victim when Natale Bonia, 37, of 244 Thirty-eighth street, died in St. Francis Hospital at 2:45 o'clock this morning, according to the theory of county detectives.

Bonia and an unidentified man last Monday evening stopped at a house at Eleventh and North Canal streets, Sharpsburg, and when they left a quarrel started. Bonia's companion drew a gun, fired, stepped into his automobile and sped away.

Police found Bonia on the sidewalk and sent him to the hospital, but have obtained no clue to the identity of his companion.

Killed Saving Payroll

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 15.—(INS.)—Five bandits killed Thomas Kennedy, 50, a guard of the Belmont Trust Company, and wounded two of his companions in a daring but futile attempt to rob them of $13,000 in frontof the company's branch office here today.

One of the bandits is believed to have been shot in the leg. He was aided into an auto by his companions, who then drove away.

Policeman William Houch was felled by one of the robbers as he sought to protect William Lindsey, 45, one of the messengers, who had been shot through the leg and back, falling on the money bag he had been carrying. Lindsey is in a serious condition in a hospital.

The other wounded bank employe is Raymond J. Kelter, 24, a teller, who received a flesh wound in the right ankle.

Kennedy, a former policeman, was shot through the heart, dying instantly.

Kennedy, Lindsey and John Hagerty, assistant treasurer of Bywood, started from the main office in the armored machine driven by Kennedy, to take money to the branch. Keller followed the armored machine in a touring car.

The armored machine drove up in front of the branch. It was before opening time. Keller drove in front of it and alighted to unlock the door for the three occupants. Hagerty stepped out and was followed by Lindsey, each carrying a money bag.

Suddenly five well-dressed young men ran from an alley. The leader held a gun in each hand and his companions each pointed a pistol at the bank employes.

"Stick 'em up! Stick 'em up, I tell you," shouted the leader.

Hagerty dashed toward the bank. The door had previously been opened by Keller. Bullets spattered about the messengers. Hagerty reached the bank safely, threw his satchel in the safe and slammed it shut. A bandit climbed to a window, smashed it and fired at Hagerty, who dropped behind a counter.

Lindsey tried desperately to reach the bank building, but collapsed as bullets entered his back and leg. Realizing Lindsey had fallen on the money, Kennedy jumped out of the armored car and ran the gantlet of bullets to save the cash, yanking at his holster to release his pistol. He fell dead with several shots through the heart.

tive positions and that no voluntary gifts will be refused. Two primary candidates, District Attorney Samuel H. Gardner and Register of Wills Joseph N. Mackrell, filed expense accounts showing contributions from employes in their offices.

The Republican candidates themselves, although most of them are without serious opposition, will be expected to make large contributions to the general campaign fund. During the primary campaign the organization entries were assessed amounts varying upward from $1,600 each. Three independents—Judges Richard W. Martin, James H. Gray and Frank P. Patterson—won places on the Republican ticket. Their answer to a demand for contributions to aid the entire ticket is being awaited with considerable interest.

1,000 BOTTLES OF BEER SEIZED, MAN ARRESTED

One thousand bottles of beer were seized when prohibition agents raided the building at 2563 Evergreen road last night and arrested Harry Schauer, 45. A 100-gallon still and 25 gallons of moonshine were confiscated when another squad visited Charles Tom, 52, in Penn township. Both men furnished bond for a hearing.

Ruth, in Plus Fours, Describes Flight

By International News Service.

HORTA, the Azores, Oct. 15.—"We are none the worse for the adventure and we are overwhelmed by the interest displayed in us."

Ruth Elder, bronzed by sea winds and smiling cheerfully, made this statement today to the throng of officials who welcomed her immediately upon her arrival on the S. S. Barendrecht, which rescued Miss Elder and her pilot, George Haldeman, when their transatlantic plane American Girl was forced down at sea by a failing oil line.

The thrilling flight and the fortunate rescue constituted just another adventure for the American girl, who has been an aviatrix for several years and experienced many of the perils of the air, and who seemed to be but little concerned over her new experience with the peril of the sea.

With a leather "wind cheater" buttoned closely around her to protect her from a driving rain, and still wearing the plus fours in which she dressed herself in Garden City before the flight across the ocean started, Miss Elder stood on the deck and gave a description of the flight and rescue which clearly indicated that she thought it was just one more adventure.

"We had every hope of success until the derangement of the fuel pressure pump—two hours before we finally came down," Miss Elder explained. Here she paused to express the disappointment which both she and Haldeman have because of their failure to reach European shores.

Miss Elder paid high tribute to Capt. Goos of the Barendrecht, who, she said, had apparently sighted the American Girl and, realizing it was in trouble, had hauled his ship to and stood by to rescue the fliers.

"We were aboard the Barendrecht 15 minutes after we hit the ocean," Miss Elder explained when asked about the thrills of the ocean rescue, and she seemed to accept it as a matter of course, but she appeared considerably disappointed when she told of the destruction of her plane and its abandonment after it had caught fire.

Kaltenbach, of the county engineer's office, and Harry Stanley, of the South Hills and Chartiers Valley Tunnels and Ferry Street Bridge Association, backers of the project.

The people of Allegheny county should elect a Democratic district attorney to push the prosecution of persons accused of election frauds, Frank X. McCulloch, minority party nominee for that office, said last night at a meeting in the headquarters, 411 Grant street.

"The people are not going to leave this important matter in the hands of a district attorney so closely allied with the Regular Republican interests," he said.

Commissioner James Houlahen, special target of the independents, expressed confidence in his re-election. County Chairman David L. Lawrence presided.

a husband might be, if he were not what he is.

NEARER reality is the "husband calling contest." At the Suffolk, Va., fair prizes were offered for wives that could call their husbands, with a voice endearing and audible from afar.

The wife, combining endearment with extreme radius, was to be crowned queen of husband callers. Unregenerate husbands will shudder at the thought of that penetrating, endearing call.

WIVES have been engaged in that husband calling contest for 500,000 years, first to get him, then to keep him.

Their patience throughout the ages is amazing, the smallness of their reward pathetic.

TWO unusual news items:

A clergyman kills himself. No need to print his unfortunate name.

A young woman is caught stealing to get money to buy tombstones for her mother and sister.

That clergymen struggle on as they do, many poor and neglected in old age, is a tribute to their courage, and a disgrace to men.

That the young woman should steal to buy tombstones is a reflection on her common sense.

The Angel Gabriel is amazingly accurate, in memory and memoranda. There is no possibility of his forgetting or mistaking anyone, even though buried in the sea. Besides, science proves that the earth and men on it will last at least one hundred million years longer. No tombstone could outlive that period.

THOUSANDS of poor widows and daughters, by the way, rob and impoverish themselves to provide tombstones and elaborate funerals for husbands and fathers that never did much for them.

The poorer families suffer most in this way, and clergymen should discourage regardless of sexton's protests.

TWO legal decisions of interest:

A Pennsylvania judge decides that husbands cannot escape alimony by getting divorces in Nevada or elsewhere, on favorable terms. The home town judge will decide what the lady should have.

A Federal judge says the owner is responsible if his building falls in an earthquake or hurricane and it can be shown that it was not properly built. Hitherto it has been the custom to blame the Almighty and call it "an act of God," as your British steamship ticket tells you the company is "not responsible for acts of God, or kings' enemies."

The judge says if you build badly and kill people, you, and not God, will be responsible.

SEWICKLEY ATTORNEY'S SON STRUCK BY TRUCK

While riding a bicycle on his way to school late yesterday, Henry Nevin, 12, son of Franklin T. Nevin, attorney, of 601 Hopkins street, Sewickley, was struck by a motor truck at Beaver and Grove streets, Sewickley, and seriously injured. The driver of the truck took the boy to the Sewickley Hospital, where it was said today he was suffering from brain concussion and possible internal injuries, but probably would recover. The child's father said today he was convinced the truck driver was not to blame.

ALBANIAN ENVOY SLAIN

By Universal Service.

PRAGUE, Oct. 15.—The Albanian Minister to Czecho-Slovakia, Zena Bey, was murdered here last night.

Bey, recently given his diplomatic post here, was with a crowd of convivial friends at the "Passage Bar," one of the Prague's most fashionable night resorts. A young man swaggered through the door, faced Bey, and shot him three times. The Minister was killed instantly.

Friends of the Minister seized the assassin.

The slayer was identified as Algibia Bebi, a 23-year-old Albanian student.

He confessed he murdered the minister because the latter was a "traitor to his country and sold Albania to Jugo-Slavia."

Bebi trailed Zena Bey four days and came to Prague from Rome.

Zena Bey arrived in Prague a week ago. He was alleged to be violently anti-Italian and a scion of the highest Albanian aristocracy. His father was personal aide to the late Turkish Sultan Abdul Hamid.

Weather Conditions.

The high that was central yesterday morning over the central valleys drifted eastward rather slowly, increasing in pressure. This morning it stretches from the lower St. Lawrence valley southwestward to Texas. The crest of the high overlies the Appalachian states, highest pressure 30.48 inches at Elkins, W. Va. It is producing clear skies throughout its entire area, but considerable fog, and light to heavy frosts from Tennessee and North Carolina northward. Another high has developed over the Northwest. It covers the Northern Plains states and the Northern Rocky Mountain states. It is producing temperatures near freezing over the Northwest, but not much below the normal.

Separating the two highs is a low pressure area, with its center north of Lake Superior. It is causing some cloudiness and light rains along the Canadian border, and rising temperatures throughout the Mississippi Valley states.

Ruth Elder Landed by Ship at Azores

til our oil pressure pump began to cause anxiety," said the fair aviatrix. "That was about two hours before we came down."

Capt. Goos, who was standing by, said that he had sighted the plane and, realizing from its actions that it was in difficulty, made arrangements to give help. It was the result of his maneuvers the plane was able to come down alongside the ship. A lifeboat was launched and the occupants of the American Girl, were picked up at once.

Agents and messages from various steamship companies were here offering the flyers free transportation to either side of the Atlantic.

PARIS, Oct. 15.—(AP.)—Ruth Elder has failed to reach Paris from New York by air, but the French capital is convinced that she will finish her trip by whatever means and eagerly awaits her coming.

Having gripped the imaginations of the Parisians by her courageous attempt and her dramatic rescue at sea, the fair flier's name today was still on everybody's lips and on the first pages of all the newspapers.

Preparations have been made to give her a fitting welcome. It appears, however, that she will be unable to make her entry into the capital before the end of next week, as it is understood here that she and her co-pilot, George W. Haldeman, will take the regular Portuguese steamer at Horta tomorrow, which would land them in Lisbon Wednesday.

LISBON, Portugal, Oct. 15.—(AP.)—It is stated here that it has been arranged for Ruth Elder and her flying companion, George Haldeman, to leave Horta for Lisbon on the Portuguese steamer Lima. From Lisbon they will take the southern express to Paris.

TWO FRENCH ACES FLY OVER ATLANTIC

GAME OF TAGS

G. G. Stitzman, of New Castle, teacher of the Men's Bible Class of the Epworth Methodist Episcopal Church there, gets tagged. Mrs. Sidney Smith put in her day at the annual convention of the Sabbath School Association taking care of the official business of organizing the "who's who" of the delegates. Here she is pinning a reception committee badge on Stitzman.

PREPARING FOR MESS CALL

The delegates prepare for mess call by lining up before the counter over which luncheon tickets were passed out. Mrs. H. L. Marvin, shown in the foreground of the picture, was chairman of the committee which had charge of this detail. She and coworkers handled all arrangements for meals for the 500 delegates who attended the convention from virtually every section of Western Pennsylvania.

DISCUSSION

Dr. Ralph M. Lloyd, of Edgewood, explains the situation to Mrs. L. C. Gardener, a delegate, and Mrs. H. H. Lambert and Mrs. Charles E. Clark. The picture was snapped outside a conference room where Sunday school problems were discussed by sectional groups during the convention.

BAR BODY AIDS VOTE PURGING

The purification of Pittsburgh's politics became an organized business today with the Allegheny County Elections' Association molded into a permanent organization and the Allegheny County Bar Association standing as a watch dog over prosecutions for primary election law violations.

Members of a committee of five from the bar association met with District Attorney Samuel H. Gardner yesterday for the second time since the primary election probe started. They discussed the 125 odd warrants issued through Gardner's office on information furnished him concerning irregularities at the primary. They talked of prosecutions and hinted at possibilities of "pigeon-holing" some of these cases which name prominent political leaders. And when it was over, Joseph Stadtfeld, president of the committee, said everything was entirely satisfactory. Additional conferences will be held from time to time, he said, and the committee will stand ready to assist Gardner in every prosecution.

Nothing to that effect was said, but there was no attempt to correct a general impression that the bar association represented the velvet glove which concealed the iron hand in carrying out the prosecutions.

Following the bar association conference, the elections' committee met and went into the permanent organization state. In this status, it will keep vigil throughout the year from permanent headquarters to be selected later. The first year's expense was fixed at $8,000 and the belief was expressed that this amount would be quickly subscribed. Temporary officers were made the permanent officers. The organization's aim, it was stated, will be to maintain a non-factional policy and its main work will be to insure an honest count of votes.

The probe efforts today were expected to be centered on an investigation of alleged padded registration lists in the First Ward.

FRENCH AIR ACES HOP ATLANTIC

By International News Service.

RIO DE JANEIRO, Oct. 15.—Dieudonne Costes and Lieut. Joseph Le Brix, French aviators, arrived at Port Natal, Brazil, at 11:40 o'clock last night, completing the flight from St. Louis, Senegal, from where they hopped off early yesterday.

When the flyers landed they completed the first flight made from the mainland of Africa to the mainland of South America.

The flight across the South Atlantic was made in very good time, the French aviators traveling the 2,125 miles in about 22 hours.

From Natal they will fly to Rio de Janeiro and from there will proceed to Buenos Aires, the ultimate destination of their flight.

After their arrival the flyers were welcomed by the Governor and taken to the Hotel Central, where they were official guests.

Although their start and most of the flight was fine, the aviators said, disaster threatened them when they were almost to their goal. Costes told the International News Service:

"When we were near the mainland we noticed that something had gone wrong with the propeller. For a time we thought we would be forced down, but the motor and the propeller held out and we continued.

"However, we will be unable to fly to Rio de Janeiro Sunday morning as we had planned. It will require several days to repair the propeller."

The fliers said they had seen no ships on theeir flight and although they heard several radio calls for them, they did not answer, as their apparatus was not working well and it was unnecessary for them to ask for directions.

THE SUN-TELEGRAPH MELODY WAY CLUB

SIXTH LESSON

Copyright, 1927, by W. Otto Miessner

Here is another surprise for you! Two pieces in one lesson! That may seem, at first thought, like a large order. However, you know by this time that I have great faith in your interest, in your perseverance and in your ability!

"Where there's a will there's a way"—so the old proverb goes. I've no doubt that you have the will (because you are studying these lessons), and, through the lessons, you get the Melody Way.

Just make up your mind that you can master anything that thousands of other folks can do, then "go to it" and "stick to it." There's nothing like keeping at the job to finish the job.

Anyway, this task is going to be one of the most pleasant of all, because "My Pony" is a favorite with all Melody Way pupils. As you play this piece, you can easily imagine that you are mounted upon a high stepping, prancing "thoroughbred."

"My Pony"

There are several interesting features in this piece. First, the form which is like a sandwich. In the first part, both hands play the tune. In the middle part, the left hand takes the tune. You can almost feel it "rear" up and down, like a bucking broncho! Then, in the third part, both hands have the Melody again. Really, this piece will help you later to understand the form of some of the great masterpieces.

The Form of "My Pony"

Counts—	One	Two	One	Two
First Part—	Trot All a-	Trot round the	Trot lot	x x
Second Part—	Hik-ing Aer-o-	is not plane nor	to my mot-or	lik-ing bik-ing
Third Part—	Go my Whoa my	pon-y pon-y	go! whoa!	— —

Quarter Rest

The x at the end of the first two lines is used here instead of the quarter rest. See if you can find it in the music in the second measure after the note So and again in the fourth measure after the note Do. Rests indicate silence. Therefore, you must stop the tone during the length of a rest whether you sing or play. The quarter rest here means a silence on the second beat.

Play the Melody

Now we will try a "queer" way of learning a piece! However, I think you will find it a sensible way, because you will do first the parts that are familiar. Place your Key-Finder with Do on G. Study, for a moment, the last phrase.

Last Phrase First!

Counts—	1		2		1	2	1		2		1	2
Words—	Go	my	pony		go!	—	Whoa	my	pony		whoa!	—
Tones—	Do	Re	Mi	Fa	So	—	So	Fa	Mi	Re	Do	—
R. H.—	1	2	3	4	5		5	4	3	2	1
L. H.—	5	4	3	2	1	—	1	2	3	4	5	—

This is exactly what you have been playing before every piece to become familiar with the key. Don't overlook the I Chord in the last measure for the left hand.

First Phrase

If you can play the last phrase you will have no trouble at all with the first phrase, because both Motifs are familiar:

Do	Mi	So	—
So Fa	Mi Re	Do	—

Now, therefore, you already know, and should play right off two-thirds of "My Pony" with both hands together! So far, so good!

The Middle Phrase

Every good sandwich should have "lots of meat" or "loads of jam" in the middle of it—don't you agree? Well, then, this is a fine musical sandwich, for the most interesting part of this piece is its middle part. That is why we saved it to study last.

Middle Phrase

The right hand part, after all, is familiar because you have played "Magic Music" in the Key of G with the Chords in the right hand.

Counts—	1	2	1	2	1	2	1	2
Chords—	V		I		V		I
	So D	—	So D	—	So D	—	So D	—
	Fa C	—	Mi B	—	Fa C	—	Mi B	—
	Ti F♯	—	Do G	—	Ti F♯	—	Do G	—

Ah, but the "bucking broncho" part with the Melody in the left hand—that is a different story! Like a skillful rider, you must keep your wits, for this Melody skips around most skittishly, for the world like a spirited horse!

Now if you but analyze this middle Melody you will see that, after all, there are only two Motifs, one of which is familiar—the other very much like it. Both use the same fingers, although the arm shifts from the Do Chord position to the So Chord position on the keyboard.

As before, at the very bottom of the printed music page you will find this new chord motif, with the tones, however, in reverse order:

So Ti Re

Trace these tones from the notes, to the keys, to the letter names above:

D	F♯	A
So	Ti	Re

Now find them on your large keyboard and at the piano with the help of your Key-Finder, which must be placed so that the middle Do falls on the first G to the left of Middle C.

Now play this V Chord Motif four times, playing the keys in the right order, like this:

Counts—	1		2
Tones—	Re	Re	Ti	So
Fingers—	1	1	3	5
Keys—	A	A	F♯	D
R. H. Chord—	V		—

Now shift the arm and alternate with the I Chord Motif:

Counts—	1		2
Tones—	So	So	Mi	Do
Fingers—	1	1	3	5
Keys—	D	D	B	G
R. H. Chord—	I		—

Now join the three phrases and play through from start to finish.

Follow the Notes

As soon as you can play "My Pony" without a mistake, train your eyes to follow the notes as you play. Observe the dots directly above or under some of the notes. This dot means that the note should be short and crisp—about half the usual value. Such playing is called staccato. When you play smoothly, as in "Lady Moon," this is called legato. Can you guess why "My Pony" should not be played smoothly?

Mood

Do you know why "Lady Moon" should be played smoothly and softly? How do you feel when you gaze at the moon? Most people say that the "Lady Moon" makes them feel poetic or romantic. Play "Lady Moon" again with expression and see if you can feel the mood.

Now play "My Pony" again and notice the difference between the moods of the two pieces. "My Pony" makes you feel alert—makes you want to "get up and go." "Lady Moon" makes you feel pensive, or want to sit and dream or build "air castles."

There are many beautiful moods that Music can inspire in us if we will listen intelligently and respond to it. It is most important for you to try to grasp the mood of each piece, for then you will play with expression and other folks will love to listen to you.

This, also, is why it is so important to memorize the figures and motifs you meet in familiar Music. You appreciate now how this has helped you quickly to learn "Lady Moon" and "My Pony," both of which were made up mostly of ideas already familiar but in a new arrangement or order.

But there is still another reason why you should know these figures and motifs, rhythmic, melodic and harmonic. Knowing them instantly when you hear them or play them—by ear, by hand, by name, by sight—you will be able to memorize all of your pieces in a fraction of the time that would be required if you were compelled to think of each separate note.

The moment you have memorized the mechanical or physical side of the playing, you can give all your attention to the poetry, the mood, the feeling and its interpretation. Then you will come truly to enjoy Music and your friends will enjoy it with you.

"Happiness"

This little piece is a musical setting of a couplet by one of your favorite authors, Robert Louis Stevenson. It has no new melodic figures, although there is a peculiarity about them—they extend across the measure bars. This is because the strong accents of the poem fall upon world—full—number—things.

The Melody

Recite or scan the poem to get the time-feeling:

Counts—		3	1	2	3	1	2	3	1	2	3	1	2
Words—	(1)	The	world	is	so	full	of	a	num	ber	of	things	—
	(2)	I'm	sure	we	should	all	be	as	happy		as	kings	—

Rhythmic Figures

Locate these two rhythmic figures by framing them as often as you can find them in "Happiness":

Count 3 1 2

Drum (1) ♩ | ♩ ♩

(2) ♩ | 𝅗𝅥

Melodic Figures

Locate these melodic figures as often as you can find them:

Count—		3	1	2
Tones—	(1)	So	Mi	Do	How often?............
	(2)	Mi	Fa	Mi	How often?............
	(3)	Re	Do	—	How often?............
	(4)	Re	Mi	Do	How often?............

Now play the Melody on the keyboard and at the piano, joining the figures smoothly so that you play the phrase through without a break. Observe the accents. Use the Key-Finder only if necessary.

The Left Hand

There are five things to observe:

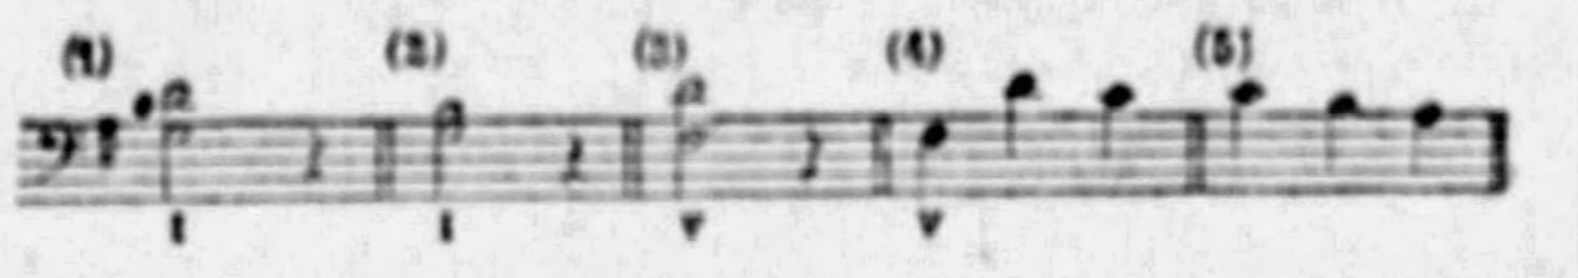
(1) The I Chord without Mi. How often?...............

(2) The I Chord without So. How often?...............

(3) The V Chord without Fa. How often?...............

(4) The V Chord tones played separately: Ti So Fa.

(5) The Melodic figure Fa Mi Re.



Study and play each item separately. Now play the left hand part through alone. Play both hands together.

Half Way

If you have completed this lesson, you will be half way through your first course in Music. Travelers, when half way up a mountain, often discover a half way house where they stop to rest and look back over the road they have traveled. Students, half way through the school year, are examined to find out how much they have learned and remembered. This also will be good for you. Try now to answer these 20 test questions. The right answers will be printed at the end of the seventh lesson.

Have you taken the examinations, called I. Q. tests, at school? You know, they tell how you rank with your classmates in intelligence. That is why they are sometimes called "intelligence tests." The letter Q stands for "quotient," which means "how many."

This shall be your M. I. Q. test, for your Music Intelligence Quotient. "How many," I wonder, will you answer correctly?

That all of you will rank 100 per cent is my wish for all the members of the Melody Way Club.

Test Questions

The Most Brilliant Social Asset Is the Ability to Play the Piano

Acquire the ability to play the piano and you will never lack friends. For the greatest of all gifts will be yours—the ability to entertain, to bring pleasure, to comfort, and to inspire with music. Such a man or woman is always popular, always sought after, whether his music be that of the great classics or the foot-itching rhythm of today's jazz.

Every child deserves the privilege of a piano education. When you give this knowledge to your children, you provide them with a permanent source of attraction and lay the foundation of undying happiness.

Today's pianos are made to fit every type of room and every size of purse—grand pianos, baby grands, uprights, and player pianos with their repertoire of the world's greatest music.

Stop in at the show rooms of these piano merchants, and learn how easy and inexpensive it is to give your family this wealth of happiness and culture—a piano.

SYMPHONY DRIVE GIVEN IMPETUS BY PRESIDENT

Workers in the membership drive of the Pittsburgh Symphony Society were fired with new enthusiasm by references to influence of music and orchestras in the life of the community by President Calvin Coolidge on his visit here.

Mrs. William Maclay Hall, president of the society, expressed the attitude of the organization when she declared:

"The Pittsburgh Symphony Society, in promoting good music and in creating Pittsburgh's own orchestra, is indicating through this work the same value that President Coolidge attributed to artistic and musical contributions to the community when he said, 'Out of them (the activities of our country) the nation is supporting its religious institutions, endowing its colleges, providing its charities, organizing its orchestras and encouraging its painting.' And he further emphasized progress through charitable and musical development when he stated, 'It is apparent in your stately edifices dedicated to religious worship, in your school buildings, and in your charitable and philanthropic institutions. A fitting example of this development is this beautiful music hall.' All this is heartening to those who are working so valiantly to complete the membership drive for associate and contributing members which the society is now conducting. After waiting almost 20 years, it now seems probable that Pittsburgh will again assert itself through its own orchestra."

Won't Fight Divorce of Twice-Eloping Wife

"I wouldn't spend any more money to contest my wife's divorce suit. It wasn't worth it," declared Russell B. Stewart of Bellevue, today when questioned about the case, following the handing down of a decree to the wife on charges of cruel and barbarous treatment,

Mrs. Helen E. Stewart, the wife, left her husband, the latter alleged, in March, 1926, with a silk hosiery salesman, Mack S. Pittard, and is said to have married him without first obtaining a divorce from Stewart. She was located in Richmond, Va., and after charges of abandonment, bigamy and violation of the Mann act were straightened out, Stewart brought his wife back to Pittsburgh. She left him again about a week later, he said.

Stewart says he gave his wife "a half dozen chances" and spent $300 to bring her back to her children and home, but that she persisted in her affair with the hosiery salesman.

"I caught her writing a letter," Stewart says, "after her return from Richmond. I waited until she was nearly through and then asked her to whom she was writing. She tore the letter, but I got it after a scuffle, and when I pieced it together I found it was to Pittard. She told him she would try to join him again if she could get away and wanted him to come closer to Pittsburgh, where they could be together oftener.

"What kind of a wife do you think she was? What would you do if you were me?" the husband concluded.

Records at the Salvation Army Women's Home and Hospital, Meade street, Bellevue, disclosed that a boy had been born to Mrs. Stewart in November, 1926, less than a year after she left home with Pittard. Stewart denies parentage of the child and when asked about it this morning said he did not know of the baby's birth.

"If my wife has another child, I most certainly am not its father," he declared.

M. E. DELEGATES ELECTED

Delegates to the quadrennial convention of the Methodist Episcopal Church in Kansas City, Mo., in 1928 were elected at yesterday's sessions of the annual meeting of the Pittsburgh conference of the church in McKeesport.

Seven ballots were required to select the six ministerial representatives. They are:

The Rev. R. B. Urmy, pastor of the Bellevue church; the Rev. H. M. Chalfant of Harrisburg, editor of the Pennsylvania section of the "American Issue," Anti-Saloon League magazine; the Rev. S. W. Coreman, superintendent of the Methodist Episcopal Church Union of Allegheny county; the Rev. R. R. Cuthbert, superintendent of the Washington county district; the Rev. L. O. Spaugy, pastor of the First Church of McKeesport, host to the conference, and the Rev. E. H. Greenlee, pastor of the First Church, Brownsville.

The lay delegates are:

P. W. Morgan, Wilmerding; S. W. [illegible], Greensburg; W. H. Pratt, [illegible] avenue, Pittsburgh; Elmer R. Kidney, Bellevue; L. E. Umstead, Perrysville avenue, and W. F. Forrester, McKeesport.

WANTED STYLE, THIEF'S PLEA

"I wanted to be stylish and have 'black bottom' pants," declared William Henry, Negro, of 231 Jones avenue, in explaining yesterday to Judge Harry H. Rowand in Criminal Court why he had stolen a pair of light trousers from the locker of his friend, Luther Culbertson, in a railroad locker room, and having them altered irretrievably by attaching a black cuff. He also stole his friend's watch.

"I'll send you where you'll wear a different kind of stripe," Judge Rowand said in imposing a workhouse sentence of 18 months to three years.

MAN, 75, SHOT AS BURGLAR

HARRISBURG, Pa., Oct. 15.—Burglars come old in this section. Adam Girley, 75, who said he is from Reading, was shot in the back as he sought to escape when surprised in the home of Christian Erb at Palmyra, near here. He is in a serious condition in the Good Samaritan Hospital at Lebanon.

JUMPED "JUICE" AROUND METER; AWAITS SENTENCE

George Argzopolis, 71 Chatham street, apparently didn't like the way the power company had rigged up his electricity meter so he changed it. And yesterday, in criminal court, he was found guilty of stealing electric power through use of a "jumper." Judge Josiah Cohen deferred sentence.

H. B. Warner Is "Farmed Out" To First National For Role In Dwan's "French Dressing"

By LOUELLA O. PARSONS,

Motion Picture Editor of Universal Service.

LOS ANGELES, Oct. 15.

CECIL B. De MILLE was very careful not to let H. B. Warner get away from the De Mille Company after he played Christ in "The King of Kings." There was a contract, but that is as far as it went. "The King of Kings" was made nearly a year ago, and Mr. Warner has made no pictures for Mr. De Mille in that time.

Now, he has signed with First National for the male lead in "French Dressing." Perhaps I had better explain he has been borrowed for Allan Dwan's picture by Robert Kane. This is the second time he has been loaned by De Mille since he signed the contract. He also played the male lead in "Sorrell and Son."

I will say for Cecil De Mille, he knows the value of publicity, and the story released simultaneously with "The King of Kings" that Mr. Warner could not play any role not supervised by De Mille made a good story. However, Mr. Warner is a good actor and a story of that kind doesn't do him any harm.

There has been so much speculation about James Murray. What would happen after he finished playing the lead in "The Crowd," King Vidor's next picture. Would the other directors have the confidence that prompted Mr. Vidor to select an unknown? John Stahl chose him for "Old Kentucky," and now he has been given the juvenile lead in Lon Chaney's picture, "The Big City."

When I tell you that Tod Browning is directing Mr. Chaney, you will know that it is a crook story or something closely akin to it.

Young Murray plays a gangster and furnishes the romance of the picture. He is regenerated when he falls in love with a girl.

I believe the girl is Marceline Day, but this is only a guess on my part, and I've learned a little guessing is a dangerous thing for a columnist.

Here is a little bit of news. Madeline Hurlock, who left Mack Sennett a few months ago and started out to conquer the film world as a free lance artist, has made a very good beginning. She has signed with Richard Barthelmess as one of the leading feminine characters in "The Noose." Dorothy Revier, who played with Dick in "The Drop Kick," has the other leading feminine role. I believe I announced that Miss Revier was in the Barthelmess picture some weeks ago and it was promptly denied.

Everybody can be happy now, Mike Levee has got a job. Fine way to talk about an executive. Well, Mike told me himself he didn't know whether he was janitor or production manager for a while, and he says he didn't care, just so the pictures were turned out at United Artists. Mike has a sense of humor. Fortunate thing for him. He needs it in this business. What I started to say is this—he has been made supervisor of "A Woman Disputed," Norma Talmadge's new picture. More than that he has written the adaptation and is collaborating with Agnes Christine Johnson on the continuity.

Mary Pickford and Douglas Fairbanks have both postponed production on their next pictures until an indefinite period. The reason is the serious illness of Mrs. Charlotte Pickford. Mary, who has always been a devoted daughter, has been untiring in her care of her mother these last few weeks. She has scarcely left her mother's bedside. Mary and Doug have decided to postpone their trip East also this year and to wait until Mrs. Pickford has entirely recovered. That means that Doug will not go to New York when "The Gaucho" opens in November. Mrs. Pickford's many friends hope she will soon be on her way to health.

James Hall is back on the home ground again. He has been visiting at Fox and other studios where he has been loaned. They tell me at Paramount they are very glad to get him back for they consider him one of their most promising leading men. He has been given the lead opposite Esther Ralston in "The Jazz Orphan."

Road Sign -:- Rounder -:- Footballer -:- Pencils Can

MARCELINE DAY appears in "The Road to Romance," coming to the Penn. Romance sure has nice road signs.

ESTHER RALSTON will be seen in "Figures Don't Lie" in the Davis. Figures don't, but those who figure may.

FROLICS, DRAMA ARE COMING

Mayo Methot, who plays the only feminine role in "The Medicine Man," the new play which will open the regular season in the Pitt Monday night, is a native of England. All this season matinees Thursday and Saturday will prevail in the Pitt.

"Artists and Models" will open its week's engagement in the Alvin Monday. Ted Lewis and his Musical Clowns, Florence Moore, Jack Pearl and Jack Osterman head the cast.

"The Coconuts" will begin its engagement in the Nixon Monday evening. Irving Berlin has written the music and lyrics and George S. Kaufman wrote the book.

Opening with a Sunday midnight show, Jimmie Cooper's "Black and White Review" will be the attraction in the Gayety next week. One-half of the show is given by white players and the other by colored actors.

The photoplay booked for the Davis next week, "Figures Don't Lie," starring Esther Ralston, with Richard Arlen playing opposite.

Richard Barthelmess stars in "The Drop Kick," showing in the Grand next week.

The first Chinese Jazz Band to come to America appears with the Honorable Mr. Wu, next week's vaudeville headliner in Loew's Aldine.

"Nite Hawks," next week's burlesque in the Academy, is presented by a competent company, including Dixie Mason and Joe Melino.

"The Road to Romance," a Ramon Novarro starring vehicle, will be shown in the Penn next week. Marceline Day has the featured feminine role.

The Vitaphone program in the Olympic next week features "Visions of Spain," with Lina Basquette and Sam Ash.

Organ Programs Tonight and Sunday

The Siegfried Idyl by Wagner is included on the program for the free organ recital which Dr. Charles Heinroth will give at 8:15 o'clock this evening in Carnegie Music Hall. This selection was composed by Wagner as a birthday surprise for his wife and in celebration of the completion of his music drama, "Siegfried." Also on the program is "Toccata in C Major," one of the masterpieces of Bach. Dr. Heinroth also will play at 4 o'clock Sunday afternoon, presenting a program including Paderewski's Minuet in G.

Dr. Caspar Koch, city organist, will give the usual free organ recital in Carnegie Hall, North Side, at 3 o'clock Sunday afternoon. Marguerite Lang, dramatic soprano, will be the guest soloist, and James Philip Johnston will play the piano accompaniment. Among the organ numbers there is listed a "Cradle Song" by Mme. Ockleston-Lippa, who for many years has been active in Pittsburgh's musical life.

To Be Honored

CHAUNCEY PARSONS

Mr. Parsons, who is singing the tenor roles in "Artists and Models," claims Pittsburgh as his home town. He was tenor soloist of the Shadyside Presbyterian Church and a member of the quartets of the Chamber of Commerce, of Apollo Club, of the Lions Club and Good Fellows Club. He also has been the leading tenor of KDKA. His fellow members of these organizations have arranged to give him a series of receptions while he is here.

SOCIETY DAILY HAPPENINGS CLUBS

Cinderella Ball to Be Held Nov. 25 By St. Margaret's Hospital Board

Perhaps it might be construed as a hint to the guests that 12 o'clock is the hour to go home—but whatever it is, the dispensary board of St. Margaret's Memorial Hospital has given its annual dance the name "Cinderella Ball," and it will be held Friday, November 25, in the University Club. It would be an interesting touch if the board would provide a real live prince as "atmosphere," but even if that is not possible there is sure to be any number of entertaining features. Dances given by the board are always just a little different and this year's committee, headed by Mrs. Donald Scott Rodgers, already is working out several ideas touching on the Cinderella theme.

As usual, the money earned will be used in the clinic work at the hospital dispensary. The girls on the board take charge of the clinic certain days each week, making dressings and helping the nurses, and they also maintain a social worker. Miss Marjorie Gethoefer is president this year.

The College Club had its president's "at home" yesterday, a most auspicious opening of the season. Mrs. Stephen L. Goodale, the president, and all but one of her predecessors received, a line forming at each end of the living room. Rich new cretonne covers on all the living room furniture proved an attraction for the eye and a topic for conversation. Yellow and white chrysanthemums formed the centerpiece on the table, which was presided over by Mrs. A. A. MacLachlan and Miss Cora Helen Coolidge. An exceptionally beautiful program was presented by Miss Helen Bell Rush who gave a group of songs, with Mrs. James Henry Greene at the piano.

Hang Onto Your Head

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

"I'M THROUGH with men!" "I don't believe there's a good man in the world!"

These and similar candid statements of opinion occur in letters I receive when Sally or Betty or June or Marie write in bitter vein about love and marriage and men. In the same day's mail I am likely to come across a bit of pessimistic philosophy on the subject of girls in a letter from "Bashful Man" or "Bachelor of Twenty-two."

"Sometimes I almost hate girls," Bob may write. "Aren't there any good girls left in the world—girls like my mother!" Jim may ask sadly.

Judging by my experience with this column of advice to girls, five years is likely to find bitter Betty, pessimistic Sally, hopeless Sue and heart-broken June, each delightedly in love with one of those maddening young men, either engaged or married to him—while "Bashful Man" will be proudly marching down the church aisle with his blushing bride and Bachelor—a bachelor no longer—will be supporting a wife and pushing the baby's perambulator Saturday afternoon, blissfully content with his lot in life.

There is a certain tendency to antagonism between the sexes, which must be reckoned with. This is caused possibly—at least in part—by lack of understanding. It is hard for young men and young women to understand each other and the motives back of certain illogical actions which make the perpetual masculine and eternaal feminine a puzzle to each other. What we can't understand, we sometimes fear and dislike, even while we are attracted by its romance.

"I can't understand why I treat Frank so badly," Kay confided. "I love him, yet I tease him, and break dates with him, and sometimes just to make him jealous, I make a great fuss over other boys. If I didn't care for him, I could be much nicer to him!"

Kay, at 17, doesn't understand herself or her own conflicting emotions. So it is little wonder that Frank fails to understand her. Some day when she is especially capricious, he will suddenly decide she cares nothing for him and will go away—perhaps marry a girl he doesn't care for, just to forget or to spite Kay.

On the other hand I know a young man who is breaking the heart of the girl who loves him, and whom he loves with "everlasting love," he tells me. They had a quarrel three years ago. She told him not to come to see her again.

Later, she wrote, apologizing for her hasty words. But his pride will not permit him to reply to her letter or to go to her and tell her of his love as he longs to do.

Now, all these tragedies and the bitterness they cause might so easily be prevented if girls and men would use their heads as well as their hearts. When in doubt rely on your kindly common sense and be at least as sensible, logical, kind and tolerant to the man you love as you would be to a mere friend.

Teamwork between heart and head is both kind and a protection to love, avoiding tragic misunderstandings.

There are many men and women in this world who are deliberately unscrupulous in love affairs. Unfortunately they are often very fascinating.

I know of men who are not content until they can arouse infatuation in any woman who is both attractive and indifferent. The moment love is aroused in a woman by his allaring wooing, a man of this type loses all interest in her and withdraws as gracefully as he can. For the Don Juans loathe responsibility, and want only the thrill of pursuit and conquest.

Also, there are countless women who encourage a man to seriously love them for the sake of gifts or money or possibly just because they enjoy flattering attentions and feel that proposals of marriage are a proof of popularity and charm.

The girl or man who plunges headlong into love without consulting his good sense, his intelligence, is always prey for these thoughtless or cruel human vampires.

Girls who refuse, laugh—and tell—when a man does them the honor of proposing marriage, are one of the reasons why men have grown very cautious about proposing marriage. As a matter of self-protection a man is likely to talk much of love, little of marriage until he is very, very sure that the girl appreciates and reciprocates his love.

Most girls try to study a man whom they regard as a possible life partner. But before they decide whether he fills all sensible requirements as to character and suitability they are likely to fall in love with him. Even though you lose your heart, hang onto your head. And let your head make your final decisions.

This is not easy. But successful living is seldom easy. The more it calls for self-discipline, skill, patient, unselfish love and perseverance, the more interesting life becomes for us and the more charming and worthwile it makes us as men and women.

Even disappointed love may in time make you more sympathetic, understanding, lovable, free from the bitterness of sex-antagonism, able to listen to and obey both your heart and head in solving problems of romance. Then you will be able to attract and win love that is real, love that is wise and deeply satisfying and leads to a marriage of lasting success and affection.

SAYINGS OF MRS. SOLOMON

By HELEN ROWLAND

THE ETERNAL VAMP

VERILY, my Daughter, it hath come to pass that the world is full of vamps! Yea, they come in seven-and-fifty varieties and the name of their methods is legion.

* * *

Behold, there is the subtle and sinuous vamp—and there is the baby-vamp.

* * *

There is the vamp that vampeth with her wits, the vamp that vampeth with her eyes, and the vamp that vampeth with dimples and sex-appeal.

* * *

There is the sympathetic vamp whose business is the understanding of misunderstood husbands—and the tender vamp whose mission is the consoling of neglected husbands.

HELEN ROWLAND

There is the vamp that feedeth men flattery and hyacinths for their starved souls. And the vamp that feedeth them good dinners and winneth them away from delicatessen wives.

* * *

There is the vamp that vampeth in order to WIN—and the vamp that vampeth for the pure joy of vamping; even as the fisherman that fisheth for the joy of fishing, nor careth whether or not he maketh a "catch."

* * *

And the last of these is the most deadly to men and the most dangerous to women.

* * *

For a woman that playeth the love-game in order to WIN, may be one woman's enemy and one man's Waterloo; but a woman that playeth only to PLAY, is every woman's enemy and every man's menace.

* * *

Behold, her hand is steady and her eye unerring. Her words are of honey and her voice is sweeter than the dove's; but the look in her eye is inscrutable.

She goeth softly, as the cat by night, that she may not affright her victim and not as the modern Diana with the sounding of horns and trumpets.

* * *

Her locks are scented with frankincense and myrrh, and all her ways are full of modesty and softness and femininity.

She is more insidious than old wine and more heady than a strong drink before breakfast.

And lo, every man is as the foolish fish upon her hook which she "playeth" with skill and coolness and flingeth aside at the finish.

Go to. Every woman thinketh herself a "vamp" in her own heart; yet, beside one of THESE, all others are but amateurs and imitations, more harmless than a drink of buttermilk!

* * *

For, SHE is the Eternal Vamp!

ONE should never be discouraged by the mistakes he makes.

It has been said that "one who never makes any mistakes never makes anything else."

Some of the greatest discoveries have been made through the mistakes and failures of trying to accomplish something else.

Elimnation is the road to perfection.

The sooner one finds out that he is making a mistake and eliminates its causes, the sooner he will succeed.

Many persons are determined to succeed in a certain line for which they are not fitted. Naturally, they fail. They should not bewail this failure, but be thankful that they have discovered their mistake, and try something else.

Unfortunately, some persons are unduly stubborn in sticking to a thing they have made up their minds to do or think.

They will persist in trying to succeed in the face of failure after failure.

They pat themselves on the back and pride themselves on having "the courage of their convictons."

But they rarely have that greater courage of their convictons!

It often takes greater courage to admit that you are wrong and change your mind accordingly, than it does to blindly and stubbornly stand by your mistakes, and refuse to be convinced—in face of facts and failure!

Chill Gives Warning of Dread Pneumonia

WHAT is the most widespread and fatal of all acute diseases? What disease is found in all countries and at all seasons—in the tropics, at the poles, everywhere?

DR COPELAND

These are not questions to test your intelligence. They are asked in order that I may impress upon you the prevalence and seriousness of pneumonia. Pneumonia is this dread disease.

We hold in memory the dreadful epidemic of 1918. For a good many weeks the horror of influenza caused us to forget the war. Neighborhood invasion was more compelling than the events across the water.

But influenza is not a fatal disease. Now you are startled. What do I mean? Uncomplicated influenza is uncomfortable, but not fatal. It becomes fatal when it is complicated by pneumonia. The deaths are due to this and not to influenza.

When we speak of pneumonia we are referring really to two distinct diseases—"lobar pneumonia" and "broncho-pneumonia." The latter is an extension of an inflammation through the bronchial tubes to the air cells of the lungs. This is the form of pneumonia found after influenza, or after simple bronchitis.

But the pneumonia I desire to tell you about today is the other form — lobar pneumonia. This comes on without warning. It does not start as a cold or influenza. It comes on suddenly and prostrates its victim almost in his tracks.

The scientists classify lobar-pneumonia into four types. But we need not worry our heads about the scientific aspects of the disease. Today we want to learn just the outstanding facts, so as to know how to guard against infection with this serious ailment.

The germ of pneumonia is not thoroughly determined upon, but it is some form of germ life like the "pneumococcus," an agent responsible for other troubles than pneumonia. An abscess of the ear, "pink eye," tonsilitis, and almost any pus-producing disturbance, may be traced to the pneumococcus. But the worst thing it can do is to cause pneumonia.

The first sign of pneumonia is a chill. So characteristic of the disease is the chill that we may almost say it is not pneumonia unless there has been a chill. It may come on in the night or at any time of day. Without previous notice, the victim is in the grasp of a severe chill.

Fever, cough, pain in the chest and difficult breathing are other symptoms which speedily appear. In a couple of days the coughing brings up sputum stained with blood. "Brick dust sputum," it is called, because it has that color.

In from five to ten days comes the "crisis." The fever drops, the difficult breathing and other symptoms disappear.

If you have a chill or if a member of your family has a chill, the doctor is needed at once. Don't wait "to see what will happen." Let the doctor take charge.

Cleanliness of the hands—frequent washing with soap and water—should be everybody's rule. Pneumonia is undoubtedly a hand-conveyed disease. In any event keep clean. Wash the face with soap and water, cleaning out the front of the nostrils—do this on returning from business.

Keep the health in prime condition. Simple food, exercise, fresh air, sunlight and plenty of sleep—these are rules which will help to avoid pneumonia and all other illnesses.

Answers to Health Queries

D. R. R. Q.—What treatment is suggested for high blood pressure? I am troubled with this condition and nausea. I have been taking asafetida and feel that it has helped me, but am fearful of taking too much medicine. Would this be harmful?

A.—The diet is of great importance and should be especially advised in every instance. The nausea is due to some intestinal trouble. Be sure to avoid constipation; proper diet should also prove corrective in this regard. If your doctor has advised the medicine, follow his judgment.

M. M. Q.—I have had nervous exhaustion twice and seem to be threatened again. Have no desire to eat, my tongue is thickly coated and I cry for no reason at all. What would you advise?

A.—Try to build up your health in general. Perhaps a complete change of scene, if possible, would be very helpful at this time. For further particulars send a self-addressed, stamped envelope and repeat your question.

He Journeys to Boston and Gets a Vision Of a Vast Book He Would Write—Receipt of His Doctor's Degree

It was not all ease for the young Prof. Wilson, as disclosed in the installment of "The Life and Letters of Woodrow Wilson" published yesterday in the Sun-Telegraph. Teaching women at Bryn Mawr was distasteful, but he took the post for the salary of $1,500. Adding to his burdens at this time was the birth of his first child.

Stimulating Great Aspirations

WE FIND Wilson seizing the opportunity of the spring vacation at Bryn Mawr of 1886, while Mrs. Wilson was away for a trip to Boston to see his friends, the publishers, who brought out "Congressional Government," and the editors of the Atlantic Monthly, who had just printed his first article. He and Mrs. Wilson had calculated closely on the expense of the trip and decided that it could be done. His own diary of his experiences, his first visit to Boston, in daily letters to his wife, is so delightful and interpretative that it is here included almost in full:

"April 22, 1886. . . . The way I feel upon reaching this borough is an involuntary tribute to its fame. I feel that odd sort of excitement which I imagine the literary adventurers of Sam Johnson's time used to feel upon reaching London. After all, there is more history, political and literary, connected with Boston and her surroundings, Cambridge and the rest, than about any other place in the country. It gives one a queer sense of elation to be here, which, I confess, I did not expect to feel. . . .

"I am staying at the 'United States Hotel,' where I am most pleasantly accommodated at $3 per day—better than we calculated." . . .

"April 23, 1886. I am now ready to account for one day's proceedings. I went first to call on D. C. Heath. He is a very pleasant, open-faced, cordial, and yet businesslike gentleman of about 35 or 40 years. We talked over the plan for the textbook a little and then he took me around to the Athenaeum library and introduced me to the authorities—who turned me loose in the alcoves.

"In the evening I went to the opera. . . ."

"April 24, 1886. . . . After dinner I called for Mr. Scudder (as you would say). He was out, but would be in within a few minutes. 'Wouldn't I like to see Mr. Houghton?' I woud. I was taken into a cherry-wood office and presented to a tall, somewhat rugged, but genial, hearty gentleman of about 65 years, I should say, who insisted on my staying until Mr. Scudder should come in. Mr. Scudder came in. We three talked pleasantly. Mr. Houghton invited me and Mr. Scudder to dine with him this evening, and me to go over to the Riverside Press establishment with him this afternoon. We accepted . . . Mr. Scudder then took me and introduced me to Mr. Aldrich, who is a Saxon in coloring, briskly executive in manner, pithy and interesting in matter. He was very cordial. We talked of Mr. Lowell, my 'Atlantic' opponent. Upon a sudden impulse I asked Mr. Aldrich for a card of introduction to him, and posted off to make a call at his office. We were very glad to see each other. I found him really delightful. He is a young lawyer of just my age (we compared ages, quite like two boys). He is the son of the manager and, I opine, (owner), of the Lowell Institute. He is full of matter of the right sort; and our hour's conversation ran off as if it were but a tenth part so long. I'll tell you the particulars of these little meetings after lunch some day—in one of the sweet days coming.

With His Publishers

"In the evening, being too fagged out to go to Cambridge, as I had intended, I went to the 'Mikado' instead; and, upon returning to the hotel, found a note from Mr. Lowell inviting me to dinner today; but I was already promised to Mr. Houghton, you know.

"April 25, 1886. . . . I went out to the Riverside Press with Mr. Houghton yesterday afternoon at half past two. When we got out there, he turned me over to Mr. Mifflin, who is in charge there—a brisk, clear-voiced, hearty, well-conditioned, rather young man (say seven and thirty). Mr. M. took me through the whole establishment. . . . Of course it was all exceedingly interesting. If ever I have another book published I shall be able to follow it in imagination through all its stages. . . .

"April 26, 1886. I can't complete my narrative now, for the next thing to do is to take the train at 6:30 this afternoon. Unless I get home (or, rather to Bryn Mawr—for it isn't home so long as you are not there) tomorrow morning, and so give myself part of the day for resting. I can't have any sort of a lecture ready for Wednesday. . . .

"So now for Bryn Mawr, to meet my letters from Gainesville.

"April 7, 1886. Here I am again in our cosy little rooms—not at home, as I said, but constantly reminded of home—that is, of you!

"I find that the trip (five days hotel, instead of seven as we calculated) cost me $40 only, instead of $70—quite enough, but less than I expected."

The visit to Boston vastly stimulated and encouraged Wilson. He had met men of cultivation and distinction—and gentlemen—and he felt at home among them. He spoke their language; he liked the atmosphere they lived in. He was especially delighted with Scudder and, not long after his return to Bryn Mawr, he wrote him a long letter outlining a plan for a stupendous work on politics and government, comprehensive beyond anything yet produced in the world. It was to be a veritable Novum Organum of statecraft, requiring an indefinite number of volumes.

"I want to come at the true conception of the nature of the modern democratic state by way of an accurate exposition of the history of democratic development," he wrote to Horace Scudder.

Visioning a Vast Book

Every true writer has a vision of "one great book" he will some day write—a book into which he will put all of himself, his thoughts, his ideals. All his life long Wilson was to dream of writing such a book as he had outlined to Horace Scudder. A thousand necessities of life, and love, and ambition harried him—he had to administer a university, lead a state, direct the destinies of a great nation through its greatest crisis, but always he was coming back longingly and lovingly to the book of his vision. It came to have a familiar name in his family conversation: "P.o.P." "The Philosophy of Politics."

He told Dr. Axson that he liked better "The Spirit of the Laws," but Montesquieu had already pre-empted that title. Dr. Axson remembers hearing the subject spoken of familiarly at the family table: "When father comes to the writing of P.o.P." At first, in those ardent early days, he thought he would be ready for his great task at 45; when he was 45 he looked forward to 50. At 50 he was in a desperate struggle over the reorganization of Princeton University. Nothing done! Nothing done! In the melancholy days at the White House after the death of Mrs. Wilson, Dr. Axson was seeking to comfort him. To the lonely man there seemed nothing ahead of him in life.

"You will write that great book on the Philosophy of Politics."

"Not a great book," responded Wilson. "The longer I think of the subject the shorter book I want to write."

In the broken days after his retirement from the presidency the old vision flared up again. He will yet write the great book! The Novum Organon of politics! When he closed his tired eyes, for the last time, the magnum opus was still unpenned.

Short of Information

As a first step in the great project he must make a complete study of the living methods, the history of Government in all the civilized states of the world. A mighty task! He had closed an arrangement when in Boston to write a textbook—a "dull fact book"—for D. C. Heath & Company to be called "The State," in which he proposed to put down a description of the governments of all nations. He does this not because he likes writing textbooks—in fact, he hates it—but he must know, to the scholarly depths of the subject all there is to know about the development of the state. There are few books in English to help him—he searches the libraries of Boston and New York—so that he must learn German in order to give him access to the best studies in the world upon the subject: he must improve his French.

At every step in all these plans he takes Mrs. Wilson fully into his confidence; she stimulates his vision, gives him courage to go forward. She now has a baby to care for, she must do all the housework, make all of her own clothes, but she begins valiantly, with him, to study German that she may help him with his endless study of abstruse German treatises. She looked hardly more than a girl.

"I remember Mrs. Wilson as a lady of very fair hair (golden) and dark eyes, of sweet and quiet manner," Mrs. F. A. Leslie says in a letter to the author. "The oldest daughter, Margaret, was the baby then. . . I think of her as a person of unusual appearance . . . slightly aloof and retiring."

We have glimpses of the young professor and his wife during the next year or so poring over German texts, one with the dictionary, the other writing down the translations. It seemed at one time as if, in order to carry on the work, he must go directly to Germany and study there; in spite of all the handicaps of his family and his poverty, he dreamed ardently of it. He wrote to his friend, R. Heath Dabney, in the fall of 1886:

"I worked hard most of the summer—all of it after the receipt of your letter; first with a sick baby, and afterwards with a big subject—the treatise on government which I am preparing for D. C. Heath & Co. I told you of the undertaking, didn't I?—the origin and early history of government viewed historically, of course, and not a la Rousseau, Locke, et al.; the governments of Greece and Rome and of the Middle Ages, treated in the same spirit; comparative studies in the public law of the present, our own and the English constitutions standing centrally and most prominent, of course; and, in the light of such studies, considerations on the functions and ends of government and on law (customary, statutory, etc.) A big task—especially in view of the condensation and clearness necessary to a book intended to be small enough and plain enough to be used as a college textbook; but a task full of delight and profit for me, and thoroughly well worth doing, because our language, as far as I know, affords no such work.

Needs German and Leisure

"Speaking of this work—which is just now imperatively interrupted by class duties, and must probably wait to be done in vacations—leads me to ask your counsel on what is to me a matter of the very greatest moment. I'll set it forth as plainly and briefly as I can. In my special work in comparative Politics—indeed in all my work—as I need hardly tell you, I have to use German a great deal; I ought to use it a great deal more than I do. But, such are my engagements, and such is my position in other respects, I cannot find, either in term time or out of it, time or opportunity to learn the language well enough to be emancipated from the constant use of the dictionary in reading it. That's one side of my statement; now for the other.

"These studies in public law and the history of government for which Heath & Co. are waiting ought to be finished—such in my interest as well as the publishers'—before the time at which vacations now promise to finish them. Besides, I have another scheme on hand, for what Mr. Scudder, of Cambridge (Mass.), calls a Novus Organon on Politics (I will lay the plan before you later if you are interests) for the preparation of which, not only a ready knowledge of German, but considerable leisure to know, better than I can possibly know it from any outlook available in Bryn Mawr, the modern world. That is the other side of my statement. Put together, the two pieces make this whole: I am just now pressingly in need of two things, German and a little leisure for wide observation of men and things. This is the best time to learn German because my acquiring faculties are still young, and this is the most desirable time at which to have leasure, because my susceptibility to impressions from men and things is as yet unblunted.

Becomes Dr. Wilson

"Such being the case, my dear fellow, I want from you both counsel and information. Would you advise me to cut loose from employment and go abroad for one or two years? And could you estimate for me the cost of living in Berlin for a man, wife and child who would not care a peppercorn for style, but who would require for a while, perhaps, a nurse, and always comfort? My plan would be to spend most of my time in Berlin, because that is the center of German affairs, but not all of it; and not to connect myself regularly with any university, but to be a sort of detached student, writing, observing, digging at German, but attending regular courses only sometimes and perhaps. If prices be such as I hope they are, we might afford to stay in Europe for a couple of years. Meantime, I have gotten a start in German; and by next June can have gotten a better one.

"What do you say, Heath? Would you advise it? I want to know your opinion, and your whole opinion. The leisure and the German would be invaluable to me! can I risk getting employment again when I return? Is the benefit to be expected greater or less than the risk which is inevitable? If you will answer me candidly as to your thought on these heads you will have revealed your dear, genuine old self once more to "Your sincere friend.

"WOODROW WILSON."

What he wants are the realities of knowledge and of scholarship. It makes him impatient even to take the time from these eager enterprises to go to Johns Hopkins for his doctor's degree. He had thought it not worth while to bother with; but Dean Thomas, at Bryn Mawr, who prided herself on having no professor in the faculty without a doctor's degree, is somewhat insistent and his wife is now really urgent, thinking the degree indispensable to his career. In May, 1886, therefore, he went to Hopkins to take the more or less boresome but nervously exhausting examinations "to secure that petty title" and writes two days later to his wife:

"Hurrah—a thousand times hurrah—I'm through, I'm through, the degree is actually secured! Oh, the relief of it!"

Tomorrow's chapter will tell more of Woodrow Wilson's great ambitions, his family life at Bryn Mawr, and his move to Wesleyan University.

TRAINS CRASH IN DENSE FOG

FIREMAN KILLED AS ENGINES OVERTURN

GALLIPOLIS, O., Oct. 15.—(AP.)—The fieman on New York Central passenger train No. 31 was killed and the engineer probably fatally injured today when the passenger train ran through a block in a dense fog and crashed head-on into a freight train.

Both engines turned over into a ditch. None of the passengers was seriously hurt.

R. O. Callahan, of Middleport, O., fireman, was killed instantly. Perry Thomas, of Columbus, O., the engineer, was dug from beneath the wreck of his engine and taken to a hospital here.

The wreck occurred at Kanauga, four miles east of here. Several passengers aboard the New York Central train were shaken up.

The passenger train was en route to Charleston, W. Va.

DRYS' EXPENSE IN PRIMARY ONLY $30

The "dry" campaign at the recent primary election was an inexpensive one, $30.90 being listed as the total expenditure by the Allegheny county prohibition committee, filed by its treasurer, F. W. Litten, with the clerk of courts.

The total collected by the committee was $31.41, of which Litten contributed $7. H. Rea Garber, prohibition candidate for Mayor at the last mayoralty election, had been treasurer of the committee and turned $6.01 over to Litten when he resigned. Among the receipts is listed "October 6, cash collection, 40 cents."

James Wiley and W. J. Dible donated $5 each; Christopher Brown, $3; Mrs. E. M. Kelly, $4, and Mrs. Mary Brown, $1. Expenditures were for printing, postage, cards and stickers.

WHEELING MAN WINS SUIT AGAINST PITTSBURGHER

WHEELING, W. Va., Oct. 15.—A Circuit Court jury Friday night awarded S. A. Williams of Wheeling $25,000 of the $200,000 he claimed was due him in commissions from B. F. Hoffacker of Pittsburgh on the sale of 3,000 acres of coal land in Brooke and Ohio counties, W. Va.

Sewickley Denies Jail High-Hat; Just Full

There is nothing high-hat, or exclusive about the Sewickley Jail. It just hasn't the facilities to care for this and that prisoner who may be brought there for incarceration, and all this talk about exclusiveness and "for Sewickley residents only," is the bunk.

The borough of Sewickley said so sonorously and officially in Common Pleas Court yesterday. It said it through Attorney Charles A. Woods, who filed the borough's answer to a petition of Ross F. Shaffer, constable, which demanded that O. S. Richardson, Sewickley burgess; W. W. Cunningham, chairman of the police committee, and S. Y. McFarland, chief of police, show cause why the jail shouldn't be open to the criminal public like any other jail.

Shaffer charged the officials there had refused to accept prisoners he brought from alien climes, such as Glen Osborne, a couple of miles away.

A date for arguments will be set later.

JUDGE UNCOVERS DIVORCE PLOT

Mrs. Anna M. Briggs of Meadow street, Duquesne, seeking a divorce from her husband, John A. Briggs, a druggist of Brownsville road, admitted in Common Pleas Court yesterday that the husband had agreed to pay for a divorce if she succeeded in getting one.

Judge John A. Evans uncovered the evidence of collusion by questioning Mrs. Briggs. He did not indicate he would refuse the divorce, but instructed Attorney S. W. Douglas to file a brief.

BAR CANDIDATE FROM TICKET

The petition of James A. Fulton for certification of his candidacy for councilman in McKeesport on the Independent ticket was set aside in Common Pleas Court yesterday. Judge Ambrose B. Reed found that Fulton was not a member of the party.

LIQUOR BRAWL MURDER CHARGED TO TRIANGLE

Terihay left the house for more liquor to continue a drinking bout and when he returned found Cenkovich and Mrs. Terihay together with the door locked, he alleges.

Westinghouse Backs All Newspaper Ads

SHAWNEE-ON-DELAWARE, Pa., Oct. 15.—Concluding the first six months of its all-newspaper advertising campaign, executive heads of the Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing Company, in session here, went on record today attesting to the fulfillment of every promise made when the plan was first outlined.

J. C. McQuiston, Westinghouse advertising manager, in reporting the results of the plan, recalled that instances had occurred in every part of the United States to prove each of the nine points on which his company's campaign is based.

There points, Mr. McQuiston brought out, were intimacy, flexibility, cooperative tie-in, greater interest, instant action, telling the industry's story, localizing and nationalizing, checking results and getting full sales support.

The midwest district reported the value of timeliness, the occasion being the devastating floods in the lower Mississippi. In this section of the country Westinghouse advertising campaigns were radically changed because of the flood and successfully met the conditions imposed upon the district.

In the East, the fact that Westinghouse advertising was not only telling the story of its own products but advertising every part of the electrical industry was brought up as a strong point in its favor.

The gathering of sales managers and executive heads of the company offered the first opportunity since the inauguration of the campaign to obtain a composite picture of the value of Westinghouse newspaper advertising, an experiment of great importance to the electrical industry.

Westinghouse's all-newspaper advertising campaign was inaugurated April 1 last with the idea of perfecting a program whereby localized advertising in all sections of the country could, in effect, be part of a national campaign. These advertisements differed in detail with the varied requirements of the districts in which they appeared. It was the pioneer effort in advertising in newspaper space the products of an electrical manufacturer of the size of the Westinghouse company.

The advertising program, it was reported, will be continued much as it was originally started, so successful has been the first six months.

Sally Decides All Men Are Hypocrites and So Tells The Silent Aunt Em

WHAT HAS GONE BEFORE

SALLY JEROME is the mainstay of her family in the absence of her father, who is separated from her mother. MRS. JEROME enjoys ill health, so Sally does the housework mornings and office work afternoons. BEAU and MILLIE, her brother and sister, give little towards the support of the home, and the whole load falls upon Sally. TED SLOAN is in love with her and wants her to marry him. But the only man who interests her is JOHN NYE, Millie's employer. Nye is infatuated with Millie, who prefers a bond salesman named DAVIDSON. Davidson tires of Millie and worries Sally with his attentions. One night when Davidson is at the inn, trying to make love to Sally, John Nye arrives. He stays long enough to see Sally do her new Savannah Stomp dance and scolds her for dancing before the type of people who come to the inn—the roadhouse type of people. Sally stops dancing, and she and AUNT EM wake up to the fact that their place has become cheap and common. They let the jazz band go, and begin to lose their flashy trade. Ted Sloan hurts Sally's feelings when he proposes, telling her that he never would have proposed marriage to her while she was "a cabaret dancer." She sends him away angrily, but he says he'll come back the next day to talk things over with her.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY.

"HOW can I say all the things that I want to say to you with this girl listening in?" his eyes asked Sally, going from her to Hilda's innocent white-linen back that was turned to the room.

But Sally pretended not to see what was in his eyes at that moment. "Go right ahead, Ted," she said, indifferently. "I'm listening."

It was not a nice thing for her to do. But girls have been known to do just such cruel things to men when they don't happen to care particularly for them—and sometimes when they do!

"Can't you stop this work for a minute and come out on the front porch or some place where I can see you alone?" Ted asked, frowning. "Here, I've come all this way to see you this afternoon—quit work early and everything—and now you won't talk to me."

"Why, yes I will," answered Sally, "only I can't stop what I'm doing. This French dressing has got to be ready to pour over the salads at 6 o'clock, and I've got to be dressed, too, by that time. I'm going to wait on table tonight."

"Well, I'd rather see you doing that than dancing for the mob," said Ted, in a depressed sort of way.

Sally's eyes widened. "I don't see anything wrong about doing that, either," she said bluntly. "John Nye had a fit over my doing it, just as you did, and just as my mother did. But I never could see what was so awful about it, myself."

"Well, I'll tell you why I hated to see you do it," Ted answered. "I couldn't help noticing the way the men all looked at you—and I hated the notion of their eyes going all over you—like flies crawling all over you, somehow."

Shocked, Sally stared at him, her hands in mid-air, holding a can of red pepper and a spoon. She never had thought of that in all the time when she had shaken her shoulders and kicked up her light little heels around the big dining room. She had thought the men who came there to eat were watching her dancing, not the lithe young body. "To the pure all things are pure."

"Oh!" said Sally, and her voice was very small. "I see."

She wondered if that was why John Nye had been so angry and disgusted with her—because she had made of herself a target for men's eyes. Was that why he had said to her: "This is a fine thing for you to be doing!" in that rough, harsh way? . . . Because he hated to see the sister of the woman he was in love with, cheapen herself by dancing in public? . . . Was that it?

"No fellow likes to see other men giving his girl the once-over," Ted's voice was running on, close to her. "When a fellow's crazy about a girl he wants her all to himself, and he doesn't want her to do anything that folks might criticize her for. It's all right for the other 'fellow's girl to smoke and drink and flirt, and so on, but—"

"Don't talk any more Billy Sunday stuff to me!" Sally blazed out at him. "I don't smoke and drink and flirt, and I'm not going to be scolded for things I don't do! You make me tired, Ted Sloan! I danced for the money there was in it. The money for Aunt Em and me—and it was you who put me up to it! Now, you just take your little lecture course and run along!" Banging the glass bowl and the big wooden blending spoon down upon the table, she stalked out of the kitchen, leaving Ted open-mouthed with astonishment behind her.

When she came downstairs a half hour later, in her plain blue linen dress, with a big white apron tied over it, her cheeks were still scarlet and her eyes still blazing dangerously with unspent anger.

"Men! They're the biggest hypocrites!" she cried to Aunt Em. "I don't know very many of them, but the ones I do know are all alike. And I detest them all!"

She went into the dining room with a large glass dish of olives and celery for Beau and Mabel, who had dropped in for a free meal, bringing the baby with them.

Sally carried the tiny thing up to her own room, rolled it up in a blanket on the foot of her bed, and gave it its bottle.

Mabel was full of gossip and chatter that night.

"I'm still working for Mr. Nye," she gurgled, with her little mouth full of cream of corn soup. "I gave up the job for two days—and I just couldn't STAND taking care of the baby and washing dishes all day. So I hired a girl for $12 a week, and went back to the office! I had a letter from Millie, too. She met the most wonderful man on shipboard—a South American who has a coffee plantation. She was all steamed up about him!"

"Trust her to meet a man, no matter where she happens to be!" snapped Aunt Em, coming in with fresh rolls and butter, just in time to hear this last bit of news. "She'd find a man if there was only one left in the world—and she'd land him, too, no matter how many other women were chasing him!"

"She didn't land John Nye," observed Mabel, with the wise air of a young owl.

"She didn't, eh? Well, she had him running around like an electric train for a good many months!" Aunt Em came back at her.

"She lost out, all the same," replied Mabel. "She tried to keep him and Davidson on the same string, and she lost out with both of them. Crossed wires, Aunt Em!"

Aunt Em whipped the napkin from the dish of hot rolls.

"Well, that won't bother her!" she predicted. "She'll probably marry the South American. If he has money, you can just bet she will! Like all 'cats, she'll land on her feet every time!" And she swung around and went stiffly back to the kitchen.

Sally lingered, giving a touch to a vase of lavender and pink asters on the serving table, polishing two or three of the glasses, straightening a fork here and smoothing down a tablecloth there.

"Where's your orchestra?" asked Mabel.

"We—decided to let it go," answered Sally.

Aren't you dancing any more?" Mabel went on, her gimlet eyes going beneath the white apron to the dark blue dress that Sally wore.

"No."

"What's the big idea?" Mabel wanted to know next. "Don't you know people won't come to a tomb like this?" Her piercing gaze traveled around the empty dining room.

"Yes, they will. They'll come to any place where there is good food," declared Sally, quoting from Aunt Em. But her heart was not so brave as her words sounded.

However, that night business was good.

"I told you we'd put it over. I told you that people would keep on coming here, now that they know how good our dinners always are!" Aunt Em triumphed when she emptied the cash register at midnight, and called it a day.

But she was wrong, after all.

For by the end of two weeks word had gone around that The House by the Side of the Road had let its orchestra go, and that there was nothing to be had there but food—not even ginger ale and cracked ice. The crowd that dines out two or three times a week is a gay crowd, and it follows music and gayety and rioting. It is a roadhouse crowd, and The House by the Side of the Road had ceased to be a roadhouse. It had become an old-fashioned southern style dining room again.

On the last Saturday night in the month Sally came downstairs at 10 o'clock with a pile of clean table linen over her arm and stopped dead still at the bottom of the long, winding flight, her face white with surprised terror.

Two motorcycle policemen were crossing the threshold from the front porch. They looked at her, said nothing, and walked across the hall to the wide doorway, looking over the handful of people at tables in the dining room.

Sally looked them over, too. . . Suppose any of them did happen to have liquor with them! Suppose they did!

"Aunt Em and I would have to go out of business altogether!" she told herself, and her lovely, soft face was quite haggard as she walked slowly up behind the two policemen and waited breathlessly.

CHAPTER LXII.

SALLY'S fear-stricken eyes swept the dining room, going swiftly from group to group.

There was not a single bowl of cracked ice upon any of the white-draped tables. There was not a single bottle of ginger ale in sight. Aunt Em had given certain orders concerning cracked ice and ginger ale, and Hilda had carried them out to the letter.

Breathing more freely, Sally spoke to the two policemen who stood beside her in the wide doorway with the curious gaze of the diners fixed upon them.

"What is this—a raid upon our perfectly nice little inn?" she asked, and her voice sounded as light-hearted as though her heart were not racing with fright. She smiled her softly-brilliant smile, looking straight into the eyes of the policeman close beside her.

And he smiled back at Sally, whipping his cap from his blond head as he did it. People had a way of answering that radiant young smile of Sally's, almost without thinking.

'We just came to have a look around," he said with something like apology in his voice. "Just a little look around."

"I see," answered Sally, and walked out into the pantry with her armful of fresh linen.

She dropped it upon the shelf under the windows and rushed into the kitchen to Aunt Em, who, flushed and bright-eyed, was frying chicken at the cook stove.

"Bicycle cops," Sally whispered, catching her by the arm. "Bicycle cops! Somebody must have reported to the police that we had liquor on the premises—"

"Don't talk like a fool!" snapped Aunt Em, indignation and alarm flashing into her sharp eyes. "We haven't a drop of anything here and never did have!"

"The people who came here often did, though," Sally began, and then stopped short as the door swung open and the two policemen came into the kitchen.

The blond, good-looking one nodded politely at Aunt Em, and raised his stiff-visored cap. "Just looking around, ma'am," he said to her, as he had said to Sally.

"Look around all you're a mind to!" Aunt Em rapped out at him, sticking a fork into a piece of chicken viciously. "Look any place you feel like lookin'. But what right have you to go nosing around my house? I'm sure I don't know!" she sniffed violently.

"There's some raspberry shrub in the basement, if it's drink you're looking for!" she added, after a moment. "I put it up myself a couple of months ago, and it's about as harmful as milk! There's some cherry bounce, too, in the cellar way. Take a look at that, too, if it'll make you feel any better!" She was furiously angry, and her tone showed it.

The two men went down into the basement without a word to her. Then they came upstairs again, and vanished into the front part of the house. Sally, filling cream-jugs, heard their heavy feet going up the stairs, and shot a quick look at Aunt Em. It would be just like Aunt Em to go racing after them, to try to stop them.

To Be Continued Monday.

Madge Agrees to Introduce Eleanor Lincoln to Philip Veritzen

THERE is no embarrassment quite so acute as that with which one powerless to help, awaits the answer of some friend to a question, unexpected as well as distressing and humiliating. Dicky, Mary and I all knew what dismayed confusion must be young Noel Veritzen's at the proposition put before him so abruptly by Eleanor Lincoln, our bewildering new neighbor, but we were all helpless to aid him, and could only wait tensely for his reply. When it came it was in so low a tone that none but keen ears could hear it.

"Unfortunately," the boy said, "I should be only a hindrance to your introduction. I have not seen my father except at a distance, in years. We—we are—estranged."

Miss Lincoln made instant amends. "Oh!" she choked, "please forgive me. I had no idea I was so thoughtless. How shall I atone?"

She was altogether too flamboyant, I said to myself critically, as her eyes swept all our faces and came to rest on Dicky's as if she found an answer to her query there. He smiled at her with the rare tact and friendly reassurance which I so often have seen him use in difficult situations. But the words with which he clothed his first aid to her confusion, brought me bolt upright in my chair in bewilderment which rapidly changed to indignation.

"Do not be so distressed," Dicky said gently. "Your mistake was a very natural one, and I know Mr. Veritzen already has pardoned you. But there is another avenue of access to his father, which I am sure will be open to you. Mrs. Graham," he inclined his head toward me, "is the head of Philip Veritzen's historical research department, and I know that he values her judgment highly. I am sure that she will be glad to introduce you to the great man."

I knew that though not perceptible to anyone else but me, there was a distinct sneer in the last two words. But I was so occupied in searching for the possible motive behind Dicky's astonishing little speech, that I had no time for resentment.

Had my husband made the proposition out of a hasty generous impulse to shield Noel's confusion, had he voiced it with the deliberate intention of annoying me or, —I faced a more pleasant possibility, had he dangled the idea before her with the idea that she would remember his intervention later, and perhaps look kindly upon a proposal to permit him to sketch her?

Miss Lincoln gave me no time for mental weight-balancing, however. She turned to me with an enthusiasm which for the moment swept everything else, even Noel Veritzen, off the horizon. I realized that the girl's theatrical ambition was a genuine one, real enough to blot out for the moment the attraction which she undeniably felt for that personable young man.

"Oh, Mrs. Graham!" she said, and now with a kaleidoscopic change she was all pretty, childlike humility, not a trace of arrogance about her. "Could you, would you?—" her voice trailed off as if she were frightened, and she looked at me appealingly.

"I am afraid Mr. Graham overestimates my ability to secure a hearing for anyone with Mr. Veritzen," I began slowly, trying to make my voice judicial, and to keep my indignation at Dicky out of it. Then with a sudden malicious impulse, I saw my way clear to "get even" in childish fashion, and added sweetly:

"But you may be assured that I shall do everything in my power for you. I am to have a conference with Mr. Veritzen tomorrow, and I shall remind him of a determination he expressed last winter, to come down to this section when summer came and spend a few days. He can get suitable accommodations, for even his fastidious taste, at the Beechview Hotel, and then I will arrange an apparently accidental meeting with him for you—see that you are both at the farmhouse for tea at the same time, or something like that. Then you can make your own appeal to him."

Horoscopes

Sunday, October 16

Time shall unfold what plaited cunning hides.—PROVERB.

SUNDAY'S horoscope stresses social activities, promising domestic and romantic well-being. But beware small deceits or treachery. The mind may be contemplative.

Those whose birthday it is may have a year of activity in lines other than strictly business, with leanings toward domesticity or deep study. Shun deceit.

A child born on this day may have a studious mind, but may also love domesticity.

Notable Nativity: Rev. Sam Jones, evangelist.

Monday, October 17

MONDAY'S astrological chart is most interesting, presaging much activity and expanding fortunes, but at the same time holding hazards and tumults. The latter augury calls for cool demeanor and the former threatens loss of employment. But the splendid trines of Jupiter and Mermusy may mend ill fortunes.

Those whose birthday it is are faced by a lively year, with splendid opportunity, which must not be nullified by rashness and ill temper.

A child born on this day should have excellent endowment for success, and shall probably win out.

Notable Nativity: Gloria Joy, movie actress.

Hello! exchange desk?

Will you send out for a package, please?

MRS. JONES didn't think she cared for that coat when she first saw it. She might like it better after seeing it at home so she asked to have it sent. She still didn't like it when it reached home. Now, here was the coat, out of the store for a week. It seemed an easy matter to 'phone the store to "Call for it", and it was an easy matter—for Mrs. Jones.

But it wasn't such an easy matter for the store. That little transaction meant that thirteen departments had to perform thirty-one operations. Mrs. Jones dealt with two employes, a sales-girl and a telephone operator, but before the transaction was closed, an auditor, a delivery clerk, a wagon driver, a return goods clerk, a credit manager, a biller, a floor supervisor, a bundle boy and a receiving clerk had to perform some service.

Every reputable store not only wants you to feel free to select anything from its stock, but it wants you to be completely satisfied. It will send goods on approval when necessary and it wants you to return anything that falls short of your expectations. But it would also like to ask you to exercise a full measure of care in selecting before asking to have goods sent. If the present large volume of returned merchandise can be materially reduced, it is inevitable that any saving in the cost of operating the store will be reflected in the lowered cost of goods. Competition, itself, will see to that.

Won't you help by choosing carefully?

TECH-W. & J. PRIMED FOR FRAY

Ready

WALTER P. STEFFEN,
Head coach of the Carnegie Tech football squad, who has his proteges primed for the battle with W. & J. at Forbes Field this afternoon.

SPORT COMMENT by JAMES J. LONG

REAL feature games in the eyes of Pittsburgh fans are on the football schedule this afternoon for the first time this season.

Because it is played right here on home soil, the Carnegie Tech-W. & J. game, of course, comes in for first attention, but there are two other games on foreign loam, the results of which will be awaited with great interest, Pitt meeting Drake in Des Moines and Duquesne University meeting Bethany in Wellsburg, W. Va.

PRIOR to today the Carnegie Tech-W. & J. records show that the Skibos defeated the Presidents only once, that victory being achieved by a 6 to 0 score in 1922 in a post season game played here.

In 1922 and 1925 respectively the teams played 7 to 7 and 0 to 0 ties, but in all of the other 10 games out of the total of 13 played Wash-Jeff was the winner.

THE game in Des Moines offers the first real test to which the Panthers have been subjected this season.

Before the campaign opened, Coach Sutherland, in spite of his confidence that his team's season would be a success on the whole, was rather dubious about the contest with Drake. He pointed out that Drake had had a sophomore team last year, and that in consequence of having lost no material would be much stronger this year.

Furthermore some of Jock's friends among the western coaches had informed him that Drake had a big, powerful team that was not to be trifled with.

As a result, Sutherland said that he was slightly worried about the game in Des Moines.

IN view of last Saturday's developments, however, it would appear that Pitt has little to fear today. Drake was crushed by the Navy by a score of 35 to 6, when the poor showing of the Westerner's on that occasion is compared with the strength that the Panthers have been displaying all season, it looks as if Sutherland's warriors will win by a comfortable edge today, in spite of the long railroad trip and the disadvantage of playing on a strange field.

IN THE recent world series there were only two men who had participated in the memorable post-season struggle of 1909 between the Pittsburgh and Detroit teams. Singularly enough, these two, though on the Pirate side this time, were playing for the Tigers in 1909.

The two are Manager Owen Bush and Coach Oscar Stanage. Neither took an active playing part this time, but in 1909 both were playing participants for Detroit.

THE only other men connected with the 1909 series who still are in major league baseball are Ty Cobb of the Athletics, Manager George Moriarty of the Tigers and Coach Lefty Leifield.

An odd coincidence was the fact that in 1909, the world series opened on October 8, Donie Bush's birthday (he was 21 years old that day), while this year the fourth and final game that sent the Bucs down to defeat was played on the same date. "It was a fine birthday present I got," Bush observed.

PRESIDENTS FAVORED TO BEAT PLAID

burgh this year. Last week, on the Stadium field, Pitt successfully repelled the invasion of West Virginia's Mountaineers. Today, thousands are hoping and praying that Tech can turn aside the flashing and dangerous blades of W. & J. It is a task that would be relished by few.

For 13 years the Presidents have been meeting the Tartans. So far, they've come off first in 10 engagements and have been held even twice. Once, back in 1920, the Skibos managed to win by 6 to 0.

Today W. & J. rules a hot favorite to again whip Tech. The edge that Andy Kerr's eleven holds over that of Wally Steffen is not great enough to cause the game to be reckoned a walkaway. In fact, it is but a thumbnail advantage, scored mostly by a superior backfield. In the final analysis, the Tech line should be accounted the equal, if not the superior, of the Red and Black forward wall, with three, if not four, green men manning its positions.

HARPSTER TECH HOPE

Outside of Harpster, Tech's dashing quarterback, the W. & J. offensive weapons are far and away above Tech's. Amos, Kirkman, Cook, what a trio. And Heisel or Day, whichever Kerr elects to start in the fourth position, will round out a fine set of ball carriers.

Tech must depend to a great extent, nay, almost entirely on the well-trained foot of Harpster. If Harpster is "on," if his kicks are the kicks that threw the great Notre Dame eleven of last year into consternation, then indeed will the W. & J. task be a difficult one. It's going to be difficult anyway, don't forget that.

Opposed to Harpster as an individual attraction, W. & J. has the great Bill Amos, triple threat star and reckoned as one of the greatest individual backfield men in the nation last year.

While Tech and W. & J. are at death grips at Forbes Field, and Pitt is battling with Drake away out in Des Moines, the Dubious Dukes of Duquesne will be down at Bethany, in combat with the Green Bisons.

Duquesne is hoping for a victory, for a win will put the locals in second place in the Class B Conference and will give 'em an even break in the four games played this year. Bethany will furnish tough opposition, but the Dukes have improved greatly since the 20-0 defeat handed them by Geneva a week ago.

Grove City plays Juniata at Grove City. Westminster pays a visit to Meadville for a game with Allegheny and Waynesburg faces West Virginia Wesleyan at Clarksburg. Thiel is idle, as is Geneva. The Covenanters played Wednesday at Boston, taking Boston College into camp by a 13-0 count.

"STOP WELCH" IS DRAKE CRY

By SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT WITH THE PITT PANTHERS.

DES MOINES, Iowa, Oct. 15.—"Stop Welch" is the cry of all Iowa today as the husky Bulldogs of Drake and the fighting Golden Panthers of Pitt prepare to clash in the first big game of the year here, and the initial appearance of the Eastern team in Drake Stadium.

Some attention is being paid to the Iowa State-Illinois game at Champaign, and the Iowa-Wabash game at Iowa City, but the focus of interest is directed on the neat little brick arena where Ossie Solem's Bulldogs will attempt to stem the Golden tide that has swept three teams to overwhelming defeats.

Des Moines is tense with excitement as the hour of the kickoff approaches. The Iowa Capitol is dressed for the occasion. Blue and Gold of Pitt and Blue and White of Drake are everywhere in evidence.

Captain Gibby Welch is the name on every tongue. Can Drake halt the sensational dashes of this Eastern meteor who ran wild through West Virginia? If they do stop Welch, can they hold back the crunching thrusts of Pug Parkinson and Bullet Booth? Can they choke off the baffling pass attack which will surely be launched by dashing Charley Edwards.

The consensus of opinion is "No." Drake, sunk by the Navy 35 to 0 last Saturday is meeting a stronger team this afternoon. All Drake can do is score once and keep Pitt from scoring more than three times is the general forecast.

Drake was still minus a captain this morning, despite efforts of local fans to heal the breach between Ossie Solem and Captain Bill Cook, who was ejected from the squad on Wednesday when he tangled with his coach.

The affair smacks of an effort to further enhance Pitt confidence. It hardly seems logical that a coach would allow a petty argument to deprive him of his star ball-carrier, but Drake fans insist there is no colored man in the woodpile.

With the kickoff scheduled for 3 o'clock, both squads were in seclusion this morning and will remain there until game time.

Irish and Middies Top Gridiron Card

NEW YORK, Oct. 15.—Choice chunks of football will sizzle on a dozen college gridirons this afternoon. With baseball out of the way, this is the day on which the raccoon coat really comes into its own.

Today's standout attraction is the Navy-Notre Dame clash in the Baltimore Stadium. Here is a late November classic transplanted into the mellow month of October, showing the growing tendency to get away from the old-fashioned idea of saving the big games for the last two or three Saturdays of the season.

Notre Dame, called the fighting Irish, because of the presence of such stalwart Hibernians as Benda, Ransavage, Niemiec, Chevigney, Voedisch, Poliskey, Leppig and Wahman in the lineup, is concede a slight edge if for no other reason than that the team is Knute Rockne's handiwork.

Coach Chick Meehan, of New York University, ran his squad through a light forty-minute drill yesterday prepartory to the big test with Fordham at the Yankee Stadium today.

A crowd of nearly 50,000 is expected to throng into Harvard Stadium today to watch the Crimson attempt to "come back" against their old rivals, Holy Cross.

Yale will send in a "six-foot eleven" against Brown at the Bowl, if the lineup given out by Coach Tad Jones tonight is adhered to. With Brown's Iron Men and Yale both already defeated, the struggle is regarded as a toss-up.

The Penn State squad, headed by Coach Hugo Bezdek, arrived in Philadelphia this morning for their game with their traditional state rivals, Penn. Coach Lou Young, of the local team, already triumphant over Brown's "Iron Men," and reputed to have one of the most powerful elevens in the country, will take his team into the game tomorrow a strong favorite.

Keck, Carver, Boyle, Doyle

All will cover the Carnegie-Tech-Wash-Jeff game at Forbes Field this afternoon for the Sunday Sun-Telegraph.

The best pictures of the first important gridiron battle of the season also will be a feature.

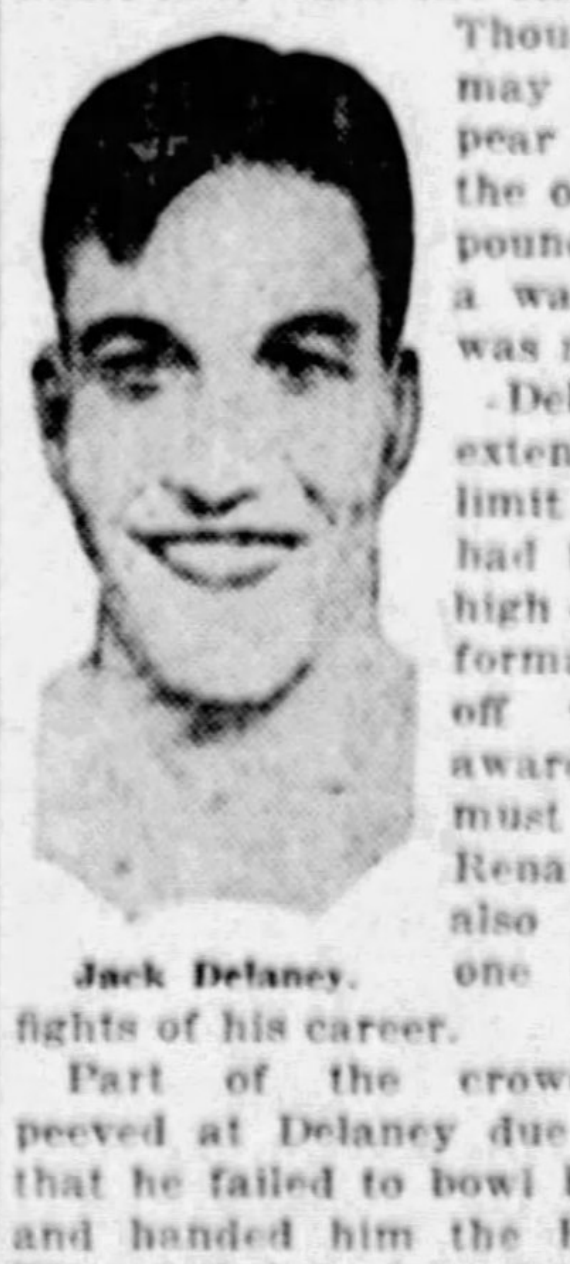
Jack Delaney Extended To Beat Renault

By MURRAY LEWIN,
Universal Service Staff Correspondent.

NEW YORK, Oct. 15.—Jack Delaney, former light-heavyweight champion, qualified as one of the field in Tex Rickard's heavyweight elimination series, by winning the decision over Jack Renault, the Canadian veteran in a hard-fought, ten-round duel at the Garden tonight.

Delaney won seven rounds, Renault two, while the other was even.



Jack Delaney.

Though the score may make it appear as though the one time 175-pound leader had a walkover, such was not the case. Delaney was extended to the limit to win and had to turn in a high-class performance to romp off with the award. The same must be said of Renault, who also turned in one of the best fights of his career.

Part of the crowd appeared peeved at Delaney due to the fact that he failed to bowl Renault over and handed him the Bronx cheer. They failed to take into consideration that the big Canadian is almost impossible to reach with a straight right to the jaw owing to his solid defense.

Delaney made numerous efforts to open Renault's defense up for his right by sticking countless left jabs into his face, but Renault kept his chin well blocked and covered at all times and never once afforded Delaney a clean shot.

THROUGH the SPORT LENS by HAVEY BOYLE

IT IS no reflection on the splendid football furnished annually by the doughty boys from Washington and Jefferson College to say that in their regular skirmishes with Carnegie Tech on the gridiron the Wash-Jeff boys walk on to the field with one horseshoe around their collective neck and walk off with two or three where only one had dangled before. On their way to Carnegie Tech games the Presidents skip through lucky four-leaf clovers and by the time the first whistle blows they represent a pretty field of those lucky emblems.

HAVEY BOYLE.

Now you might assume from this that this is all unfair to the gallant ever-trying lads from the college named after two great presidents, but if you move around Washington, Pa., you will find the same conviction—that Wash-Jeff usually gets the "breaks" against Carnegie. History shows this to be true.

On the other side of the ledger, however, it should be noted that that compensation which Mr. Emerson spoke of so lucidly and so consolingly many years ago, gets to work, for Wash-Jeff against the Panthers suffers one bit of bad fortune after another. The luck that helps out against Carnegie Tech completely deserts the Presidents when they meet the Panthers.

Being quite human, which is to say, being quite dissatisfied, the Presidents would not object to a complete reversal of this "luck," but if they are wise and philosophical they will be thankful for what small favors come along from Dame Fortune.

YOUR football soul is jaded, indeed, if you do not get a thrill out of that set of backfield men Andy Kerr will put on the field against the Tartans. Amos and Kirkman, Cook and Heisel, all experienced men, strong and fast, with Amos capable of running, punting and passing. They present a local edition of a more famous work, the Four Horsemen.

Incidentally, a shrewd observer noted that two of the boys are red-haired and two black-haired, which is unique when you know that the colors of the Washington school are red and black.

THIS is the first time Carnegie Tech has gained great attention this season. Other games previous to this were put on the schedule to give the Tech boys the feel of the enemy's chin. The Tartans come out for their first hard game with memories still fresh over their most wonderful victory over the "unbeatable" Notre Dame team of last year. Unfortunately, for the Tartans, they come into this hard game with Wash-Jeff minus those luminaries who helped so greatly to beat Notre Dame, to set a new tradition at Tech, and to astound the entire gridiron world. We refer to Donohoe, Yoder, Mefort, Manby and Goodwin. Losing five such men naturally leave a void.

The first temptation would be to say that in the face of such colossal loss the Techites are in for a bad season, but those who know how Carnegie spirit triumphs over mere flesh will wait awhile before issuing any Jeremiads.

W. P. I. A. L. CUTS BASKETBALL GROUPING

10-SECTION LIMIT IS FIXED

By VERNON A. SWARTSFAGER.

RADICAL changes in the grouping of the sections, and the elimination of one section, marked the meeting of the basketball committee of the Western Pennsylvania Interscholastic League, held in the lobby of the Fort Pitt Hotel this morning. It is estimated taht several schools may be dissatisfied with the change.

Last year, the W. P. I. A. L. basketball circuit booked in 11 sections, with an extra group open to supply a hole for the City champion if it was affiliated with the W. P. I. A. L. This year, Sections 3 and 4, with the exception of Rochester, have been combined into Section 3, with that school being transferred to the new Section 4. East Pittsburgh, a new entry, has been added to Section 8, which formerly was Section 9. Knoxville is now a junior high school and is in the city, and therefore is out. Mt. Pleasant is a new school in the last section, group 10. In Section 9, it was pointed out, Stowe Township is not a league team and it is optional to the schools in that group whether they wish tobook it or not. The W. P. I. A. L. has not been notified as to whether Youngwood has a court yet or not. Following is the new grouping:

Section 1—Arnold, Brackenridge Union, Freeport, New Kensington, Oakmont, Parnassus, Springdale, Tarentum, Verona.

Section 2—Avalon, Bellevue, Aspinwall, Ben Avon, Edgewood, Sewickley, Swissvale, Wilkinsburg.

Section 3—Beaver Falls, Ellwood City, New Brighton, New Castle, Butler, Mars, Zelienople, Evans City.

Section 4—Ambridge, Beaver, Freedom, Midland, Monaca, Woodland, Rochester.

Section 5—California, Charleroi, Donora, Monessen, Monongahela, S. Brownsville, West Newton.

Section 6—Apollo, Kittanning, Leechburg, Vandergrift, Ford City, Indiana.

Section 7—Duquesne, Clairton, McKeesport, Elizabeth, Munhall, Homestead.

Section 8—Braddock, North Braddock, Turtle Creek, Norwin, Rankin, Pitcairn, East Pittsburgh.

Section 9—Carnegie, Coraopolis, Crafton Dormont, McKees Rocks, Bridgeville, towe Township.

Section 10—Connellsville, Scottdale, Youngwood, Uniontown, Latrobe, Jeannette, Greensburg, Ligonier, Mt. Pleasant.

DAVE BANCROFT
At a price believed to range from $20,000 to $40,000, the Brooklyn Dodgers yesterday purchased Dave Bancroft, star shortstop-manager, from the Braves. On Thursday, Bancroft was told by Judge Fuchs, president and owner of the Braves, that he would not be retained as manager. Dave then requested that he be traded, and the Dodger deal followed. Bancroft has been in the majors 12 years, with the Phils, Giants and Braves.

Goldstein and Crowley Are Rematched

By HARRY KECK,
Sun-Telegraph Sports Editor.

The match the local boxing fans have been wanting to see staged over again has become a reality after months of dickering.

Announcement was made today by the Motor Square Club that it has succeeded in signing Phil Goldstein and Tommy Crowley, local lightweight rivals, for the main bout of its show a week from Monday night. Crowley's manager, Bill Heckman, accepted terms several days ago and Lou Brown, Goldstein's pilot, wired his o. k. from New York last night.

Crowley and Goldstein first met in the Motor Square ring last Christmas afternoon in the final bout of an elimination tournament to determine the local featherweight champion, and it was one of the hottest battles ever fought in Pittsburgh. Goldstein had Crowley down and on the verge of a knockout in the second round, only to be down and in trouble himself at the finish, and the decision went to Crowley for his amazing "comeback."

Since then both Crowley and Goldstein have outgrown the featherweight class and have been campaigning as lightweights and main-bouters in the East and elsewhere, but their rivalry and that of their large army of followers has not subsided and there has been a genuine demand for a rematch between them.

MIDDLES CLASH MONDAY

Meanwhile the Motor Square Club is going ahead with its preparations for next Monday night's show, which will feature a pair of middleweights in the main event. They are Maxie Rosenbloom of New York and Homer Robertson, Negro, formerly of Pittsburgh, but for several years of Boston. Both are contenders for the title formerly held by the late Harry Greb and fast workers in the ring, so that this event also promises to be interesting, although it does not carry the keen local concern of a Goldstein-Crowley rematch.

Sig Keppen and Joey Lautrey have been matched for the 10-round windup at McKeesport next Thursday night.

Forbes

Big Investors Unloading? Southern Mill's Example.

By B. C. FORBES

THE stock market acts as if numbers of wealthy investors are willing to cash in their profits and leave to others the risk of holding stocks. It looks as if railway as well as industrial issues are being liquidated by some very large holders.

Much of the glamour of recent speculation has come from three stocks, Baldwin Locomotive, Houston Oil and General Motors. The sensational rise in Baldwin, it now transpires, was caused mainly by the enormously rich Fisher Brothers' fight to enter the company. When the battle ended, not one share changed hands during an entire session of the Stock Exchange.

Houston still remains a "mystery stock," as Wall Street calls it. One main mystery is why it has soared to such heights, not why it should jump up 10 points and then flop 12 points in an hour.

General Motors is in a totally different position. It has been making dazzling profits; its hold on the automobile industry has been tremendously strengthened; its management has inspired an enviable measure of public confidence. But there are few G. M. stocks on the list.

ONE hears unaccountable whispers that the 3½ per cent rediscount rate will not be long continued by the Federal Reserve Board. True, loans have expanded at an unprecedented rate and now reach record-breaking figures. True, sterling has reached a point that causes talk of possible gold shipments from this country. And several hundred millions of dollars are about to be lent to foreign borrowers. Even so, it would be strange if the rediscount rate were raised so shortly after having been reduced.

The rise in bond quotations to new heights may be due in part to buying by those who have lightened their holdings of boomed stocks.

A GOOD one: When Mark Twain was editor of a paper in Virginia City, a subscriber who found a spider in his paper wrote asking whether this was good or bad luck. Twain answered through his paper: "The finding of a spider in your copy of the 'Enterprise' was neither good luck nor bad. The spider was merely looking over our pages to find out what merchant was not advertising, so that it could spin its web across his door and lead a free and undisturbed existence ever after."

THE South is now doing some industrial things which other parts of the country might advantageously copy.

Near Gainesville, Ga., a wonderfully attractive industrial city is being established by the Chicopee Manufacturing Company, a subsidiary of Johnson & Johnson, the well known surgical supplies concern. A 2,700-acre tract was purchased; a mill building, nearly one-fifth of a mile long, has received architectural distinction; the central mill chamber, covering five acres, has white enameled tile walls; a mill laundry provides clean clothing daily for the operators.

The mill village has paved streets, concrete sidewalks, tile drainage and sewerage and 400 houses of brick veneer construction, which have received expert architectural attention. The yards are landscaped and planted with grass and shrubs, and each house has a garden. Other features are an incinerating plant for garbage, porcelain bath fixtures, kitchens supplied with the latest modern conveniences, athletic field, park, churches, school, community house, an experimental farm, a graduate nurse at the plant and a visiting nurse, etc., etc.

The day will soon be here when the best workers will work only for the concerns that treat them best.

California produces 97½ per cent of all United States walnuts and the California Walnut Growers' Association, of 4,849 members, crates and packs and distributes more than 85 per cent of the crop at a distribution cost of only 6½ per cent. This cost includes trade discount, sales agents' commission, nation-wide advertising, salaries, etc.

The walnut producers receive two-thirds of the consumers' dollar—a tremendous contrast with what most food producers receive. An ingenious machine brands each walnut of the first grade at a cost of 1 cent per 20 pounds, or 20 times as cheaply as the nuts could be packed in the simplest half-pound cartons. American consumption of walnuts practically equals that of all other nuts combined. Because of an abundant crop and economical marketing, walnuts this year are a bargain.

Why don't other classes of food producers go to California and learn how to market co-operatively rather than stay at home and do nothing but complain?

ACCIDENTAL, JURY SAYS OF MILL WORKER'S DEATH

FARRELL, Pa., Oct. 15.—A verdict of accidental death was returned yesterday in the case of Nick Demartinis, 20, who died after a hot rod pierced his right side at the plant of the American Steel and Wire Company. He fell against the rod while removing it from the furnace.

Prices Hold Steady In Local Market

Price movements covered a narrow range during the short session of the Pittsburgh Stock Exchange today, but quotations displayed a generally firm tone. Dealings were fairly well scattered throughout the list with most of the trading involving odd lots, or blocks of stock under 100 shares, the official quotable unit.

National Fireproofing preferred showed signs of revived interest this morning, but after several trades had been made at 29, the stock turned quiet and held around that figure for the remainder of the session. Arkansas Gas was handled in light volume around yesterday's quotations and did not display any inclination to break out of the trading area to which it has been held since early in the week. Lone Star was firm at 49½, but only a few shares changed hands.

Penn Federal Corporation common hardened up to 7⅝ after having been handled at 7½ for the past two weeks. The move in this stock last month was stopped at 8, but traders who bought on that swing have not changed their attitude toward the issue. It is contended that the successful launching of the new Penn Theater and its prospects of profitable operation over the coming season will ultimately result in high prices for the shares. Penn Federal controls the theater and is in turn controlled by Loew's, Inc., through stock ownership.

STOCK PRICES CONTINUE TO POINT UP

NEW YORK, Oct. 15.—(AP.)—Stock prices continued to point upward at the opening of today's market. Midland Steel Products showed an initial gain of 2⅝ points and May Department Stores opened a point higher at 88, new high record. American Linseed common and Union Carbide also showed initial gains of a point each.

Operations for the advance were resumed on the theory that the technical position of the market had been strengthened by the recent reaction, that the 4½ per cent call money rate established yesterday was only temporary and that the distribution of more than $200,000,000 in dividend and interest payments today would create a new investment demand.

Pools were again active in a number of specialties, additional new 1927 high records being established by Midland Steel Products preferred, Lambert, Cushman's Bakery, Fidelity-Phenix Insurance, F. G. Shattuck and Reid Ice Cream, the gains ranging from fractions to 4 points.

There were a few soft spots, Commercial Solvents standing out with an early loss of more than 2 points. Rails advanced with the industrials under the leadership of Chesapeake and Ohio, Wabash and New Haven.

Foreign exchanges opened steady, demand sterling ruling around $4.86 11-16 while Spanish pesetas made further recovery to 17.20 cents.

NEWS AND VIEWS

Fails Prairie Oil Dividend.

Prairie Oil and Gas Company omitted the quarterly dividend of 50 cents due at this time. Passing of the dividend is attributed to the company's intention to purchase more crude oil for storage at present low prices.

Campbell Optimistic.

Steel business will come back gradually in the opinion of James A. Campbell, president of Youngstown Sheet and Tube, who looks for improvement the balance of the year, although autumn business has not measured up to expectations. Heavy over-production of oil, causing curtailment in drilling, has been a depressing factor for his company, he said, owing to its large pipe production capacity. The third quarter statement available late this month will be unfavorable due to low prices and irregular business, but will show the common dividend earned for the period.

Standard Gas Net $5.69.

Standard Gas and Electric Company and subsidiary and affiliated companies reports for 12 months ended June 30, 1927, net income $9,982,970 after interest, subsidiary dividends, renewals and minority interest, equal after preferred dividends to $5.69 a share on 1,247,494 common shares outstanding, against $11,124,312, or $6.69 per share on 1,227,917 common shares in the same period in 1926.

Western Sugar Advanced.

The Great Western Sugar Company has advanced refined sugar 20 points to 5.60 cents a pound.

Week's Failures Fewer.

Bradstreets estimates business failures in the week ended October 13, at 301, comparing with 324 in the preceding week, and 318 a year ago.

Corn 55 Per Cent Matured.

The Department of Agriculture has received reports that corn in the corn belt was 55 per cent matured on October 1 and 20 per cent more was expected to mature by October 15 if killing frost held off to that date. Reports to the department estimate the 1926-27 Argentine wheat crop at 229,826,000 bushels. A forecast of 115,000,000 bushel was made for Australia.

Manila Electric Gains.

Manila Electric Corporation reports for 12 months ended June 30, 1927, net income of $1,650,774 after expenses and taxes, against $1,639,637 in the preceding 12 months.

August Railroad Traffic.

Volume of freight traffic handled by Class 1 railroads in August totaled 41,913,291,000 net ton miles, the Bureau of Railway Economics states, a decrease of 1,748,728,000 net ton miles or 4 per cent under August, 1926. All districts reported decreases, the Eastern and Southern districts each showing a decrease of 4.1 per cent and Western 3.8 per cent. For the first eight months in 1927 freight volume handled amounted to 314,232,715,000 net ton miles, an increase of 1,747,735,000 net ton miles or 6-10 of 1 per cent above the same period last year, which had previously marked the high record.

Victor Talking Machine.

Declaration of a 49 per cent dividend by Gramophone Company, Ltd., of England is of interest to holders of securities of the Victor Talking Machine Company. Through its ownership of 450,000 partly paid shares, Victor will receive over $620,000 as its share of the dividends.

P. R. R. Car Loadings.

Total loaded cars handled by Pennsylvania Railroad System for week ended October 8, were 171,111, compared with 178,342 in preceding week and 187,293 in corresponding week of 1926. CHICAGO BOARD

CHICAGO, Oct. 15.—Grain values underwent an early setback today with corn touching a new low-price record for the season. Selling out on standing orders to stop losses at various fixed limits on corn holdings was the chief outstanding feature. Starting unchanged to ⅝@⅞c off, corn soon suffered a general tumble. Wheat opened at ⅛c decline to ¼@⅜c advance, and then sagged all around to below yesterday's finish. Oats were easy. Provisions tended down grade.

The following quotations on the Chicago Board of Trade are reported by A. E. Masten & Co.:

YEAGER SCORES "MACHINE"

The resentment of city employes forced the Republican organization to abandon its plan to assess the payroll, Jacob Yeager, former chairman of the Labor party, said today in an address at the McGovern-Shields headquarters, 328 Fourth avenue.

"City employes believe they honestly earn their pay, the same as you and I and their neighbors, without being forced to hand back any of it, as the vassals of feudalism paid tribute to their overlords," he said.

Denouncing the organization as responsible for the election frauds that have been revealed, Yeager said it is "a pernicious political machine which masquerades in the garb of a national party we would like to respect, but which glosses over its iniquities on the plea of Republicanism."

Yeager declared that "Armstrong and his adherents seek office for selfish purposes" as "an integral part of a corrupt intent to defraud citizens of their rights and to stifle their voices at the ballot box."

BUGS BAER Says

THE duty of a Democrat today is to supervise the administration and see that the Republicans carry out the laws passed by the Democrats between the years 1912 and 1920.

Those eight years were the bright polka dots on the Democratic banner. And all true Jeffersonian believers gulp small minority sobs when they think of the beautiful days when Democracy and power were aces back to back. And there were no fish hatcheries or Republicans.

ARTHUR "BUGS" BAER.

Times have changed indeed when an egg-laying hen is entitled to as much publicity as a Democratic candidate.

But quicker days are ahead in the near vicinity. Even now the Democrats are consolidating their forces and planning to separate the laurels of victory from the spinach of defeat.

Senator Simmons, who sings sotto voice on the Senate Finance Committee, has driven the opening wedge of the 1928 campaign. The senator is an influential Democrat in a Republican administration, which is equivalent to living in a boarding house without attaining the dignity of possessing your own latchkey.

The senator indicates that the Democrats are for a half-billion reduction in taxes and object to the utilizing of the Treasury surplus to wipe out foreign war debts. We allowed Europe 62 years to pay that money. In the meantime Europe is acting pretty uppish for one who is out on bail.

The Republicans are fairly confident of the result of the 1928 election, as they are passing no laws to embarrass the next administration.

The Democrats feel the same way about it, and whenever two Demmies meet in a one-arm lunchroom they immediately declare a quorum and elect officers.

This will be the most spectacular campaign in history, for the Demmies will not repeat their 1924 mistake of wasting so many votes on Underwood.

Now that Coolidge does not run or choose, the Republicans are without a candidate. They might borrow one from the Democrats who have a big surplus.

We will say one thing about our amalgamated political opponents. They don't go around tickling each other with Japanese back scratchers.

When the Democrats are out of power they claim the nation is going to the dogs. When the Republicans are loose from office they do the barking.

Meantime, Coolidge still does not choose to run. That may mean he does not choose to run out of the White House.

Things would be much clarified if some Democratic real estate agent would diagnose the President's monosyllabic oration and get Cal's permission to hang a for-rent sign on the executive mansion, "Owner Leaving Town."

ON "SEEKING INSPIRATION"

NICE women are constantly
Looking for a man
To LOVE. For SOME
Women have a passion
For GIVING
And possessing LOVE;
MOST of them are DYING
To GIVE it away.
At least, they THINK
They want to give LOVE.
USUALLY, though, even the
BEST of them want to EXCHANGE it for
The love of some FINE,
Strong, able FELLOW.
MEN, of course, deceive
Themselves, TOO.
They say they WANT to
Love, yet
MOSTLY they look to
A WOMAN for love.
What they REALLY want is Unselfish DEVOTION.
MANY men need women as
An INSPIRATION.
(When they have been
INSPIRED they want to
Be FREE and go AWAY
And work). So when NICE
Women and CLEVER men get Together, there is INVARIABLY misunderstanding.

Power in This Face

Just Now It Works for Russia in China.

MR. EUGENE CHEN, WHO HAS HELPED RUSSIA TO PROSELYTIZE CHINA.

This face of a Russian agent in China, Eugene Chen, chosen to persuade the Cantonese that Russia's government is best, is interesting and enlightening.

It shows that Russia chooses her agents wisely; she picks strong men.

This face, full of character, uncertain as to its nationality, only partly Chinese, shows that, despite the contrary opinions of Lafcadio Hearn and Wallace, a combination of Mongolian and other races may produce effective types.

This is not the usually accepted type of Chinese. He is only partly of Chinese blood, not at all conventionally Chinese in appearance. He is described as a perfect product of the British tailor. And his daughter, recently graduated from an American college, is a model of the latest Paris fashions.

What will come out of ancient China, with her half-billion population, as western thought penetrates the masses and as Chinese flying machines penetrate the clouds?

OLD STYLE CHINESE.

This picture shows the cousin of the deposed Chinese Emperor and his wife. They represent old China, old customs and costumes, and thought. Contrast them with Eugene Chen above, intensely earnest, modern mixed mental type of China and Europe.

Great changes are coming, there in the distant East. They interest us, and may affect us more than we now can foresee.

Those Who Pay

There is a murder. The victim rests beyond reach of life's slings and arrows. The murderer, flung from despair to hope and back again, at last pays the law-prescribed penalty, or is freed in custody of his conscience.

But there are other actors in the tragedy, almost always—bound to the slayer by bonds of blood or affection. Sometimes they rise to major roles; more often they move vaguely in the background of the drama.

Mrs. Maria Remus is such a figure. Only an incidental part, hers, in the eventual bringing to book of George Remus, "bootleg king" for the spectacular killing of his wife. Merely a mother—to undergo such anguish as can scarcely be imagined during the torturing months of trial, conviction, sentence and death of that son who once was a little boy in her arms.

She will pay, as he cannot, and will not.

Many others: The girl bride of youthful Benjamin Rader who shot a policeman, crying and puzzled as the law deals with her "Bennie."

Little Alfred Lilliendahl, who can never forget if he lives to be a hundred these nightmare weeks of death and strange happenings, whatever may be the upshot of the murder charge against his mother.

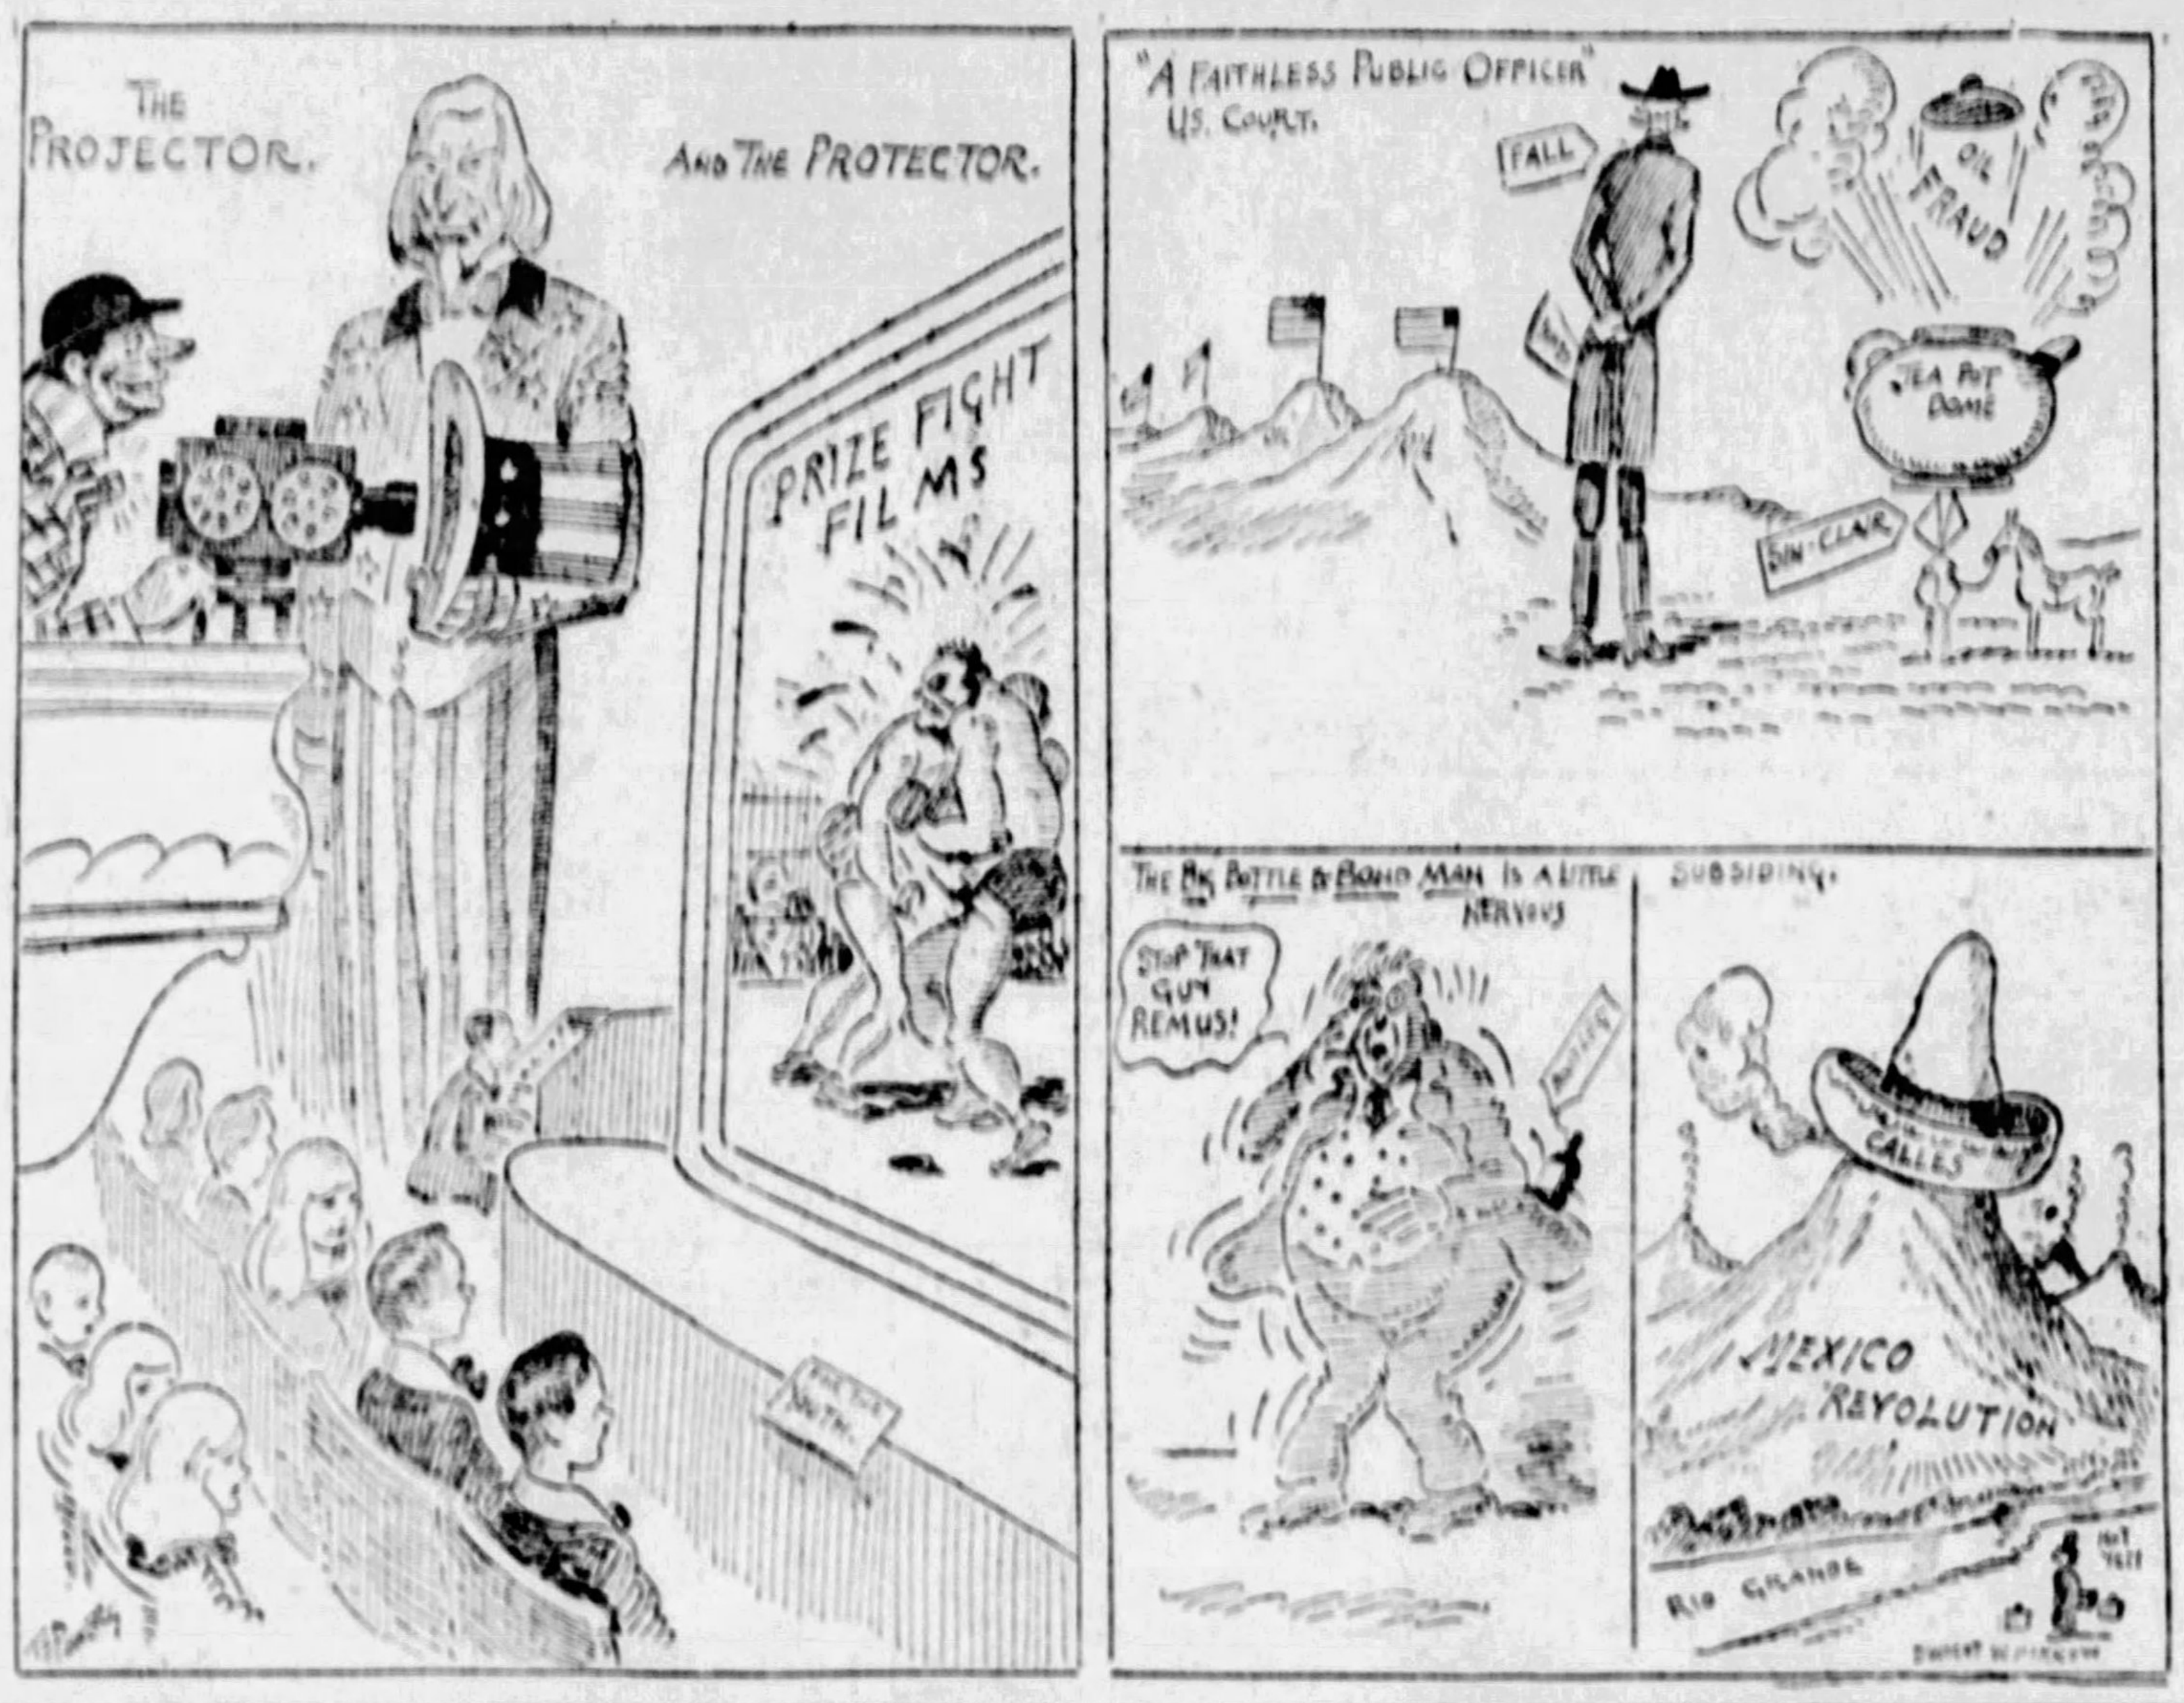
Who does not remember the wistful face of Ruth Snyder's small daughter Lorraine, picture of frightened childhood in the gallery of horrors disclosed by the Long Island City trail? Judd Gray's little Jane also, though she was spared any public ordeal.

And, among many more, the parents of Richard Loeb, serving a life sentence with Nathan Leopold, Jr., for the murder of Bobby Franks. Grief and shock killed the father; the mother visits her boy in Joliet prison, weeping. Leopold's father married again.

Consequences follow acts; falling, when those acts are evil, with crushing weight upon innocent shoulders.

The fury that drives to murder obliterates the thought of mothers, fathers, wives, sweethearts, children who must be dragged along into torment. Lesser wrongdoing, not so compelling, gives pause for consideration of those who will suffer. Thinking, in time, is to save them woe.

FIGHT FILMS NOT GOOD FOR KIDDIES



Garrett P Serviss Says:

Man and Yeast

RAYMOND PEARL, of Johns Hopkins University, finds that yeast, and not only yeast, but bacteria and that devoted victim of scientific curiosity, the fruit fly, increase and multiply according to a common law of population growth. The organism mentioned he has studied in his laboratory, but he believes that the same law applies to all living organisms, including man himself.

The working of the law of which he speaks is summed up thus:

"The population at first grows slowly, but gains impetus as it grows, passing gradually into a stage of rapid growth, which finally reaches a maximum of rapidity. After this stage of most rapid growth the population increases ever more and more slowly until finally there is no more perceptible growth at all; in short, the populations of various forms of life first wax in their speed of growing and then wane."

In comparing the "curve" of population growth exhibited by the lower organisms with that of man, Dr. Pearl has studied the census records of the United States, France, England, Austria, Belgium, Denmark, Italy, Norway, Japan, Java, the Philippine Islands and other countries, as well as the city records of New York and other towns, and the conclusion is that if the records were sufficiently long to make the case conclusive, "population growth, if undisturbed, would probably follow in human groups the complete course exhibited by the yeast population."

In one single case the entire cycle of population growth has been practically completed since census statistics have been used. This refers to the native population of Algeria. "In this case the human population followed in its whole cycle of growth a curve of the same characteristic form that has been discussed for the yeast."

It may be said that the practical bearing of all this is to show how very complete is the fundamental relation of human life with that of all other organisms, both high and low. It offers something for eugenists to work upon, and may serve to guide the efforts of those who would arrest and reverse the course of population growth in notable cases where it is at present on the decline.

The situation to be dealt with is not the same if it results from a general biological law as it would be if special human characteristics alone were at work. Unquestionably social ideas and conduct have profound local effects upon the human population growth, but Dr. Pearl's research appears to make it certain that, independent of human behavior, the rate of increase of the population of a country depends upon some deep-seated factor common to all forms of physical life upon this planet.

With the exception of man it would seem that no class of animals has any control over its rate of reproduction. If he has such control it arises from his possession of special intelligence enabling him to interfere with general laws of nature and to bend them, more or less, to his will and needs. Whether he is invariably wise in his interference is another question.

Tales That Are Told

Not So Pleased

AN American was invited to a week's shooting in Scotland by his host, and boasted to a number of new-found friends of the splendid time he was going to have.

When he returned from Scotland his friends saw him at the club as usual and one asked whether he had made a good bag.

"No," said the man from U. S. A.; "I didn't shoot anything, with the exception of my dog."

"Your dog?" echoed the other, amazed. "Was he mad, then?"

"Well," drawled the American, "you can bet your sweet life he wasn't so durned pleased."

No Wonder!

TWO men had met on the beach at Shrimpsea. Both were attired in swimming costumes, and the conversation turned towards this sport. After a few remarks the elder man said:

"I'll race you to the end of the pier and back."

"Right you are," agreed the other, who was a professional at the game. "Bet you 10 bob I win."

They plunged into the surf, and the professional swimmer was badly beaten.

"My stars!" he exclaimed. "Where did you learn to swim?"

"Me?" said the other. "I used to be a newspaper-boy in Venice."—London Answers.

Thrifty Freda

FIVE-YEAR-OLD Freda came marching home from Sunday school carrying a small paper half full of chocolates, which she flaunted in the startled eyes of the family.

"Freda!" exclaimed her mother, on beholding the chocolates. "Wherever did you get those?" She had given her daughter sixpence for the collection and suspected the worst had occurred.

Freda looked up in great surprise.

"I bought them with the sixpence you gave me," she said. "The minister met me at the door and got me in for nothing."

Business

"STOP!" cried the porter as the pleasure steamer was about to leave the pier. "There's a party of about 70 coming."

The vessel was backed into the wharf again, ropes were made fast and three gangways were placed in position.

An old lady then climbed slowly aboard.—Birmingham Gazette.

AND THEN inform me.

HE'D HEARD of it.

BUT HE'D be gosh darned.

IF HE knew what road.

WOULD TAKE me there.

AND THEN at last.

THERE HOVE in sight.

A WHISTLING boy.

SEEMINGLY SEEKING.

A LIFT his way.

I ASKED if he knew.

* * *

AND HE said "sure."

AND HE'D go along.

AND SHOW me the way.

HE CLIMBED to the seat.

AND SAT with me.

UNTIL WE had gone.

ABOUT EIGHT miles.

THEN HE jumped out.

* * *

AND WENT into a store.

A MAN came out.

AND DIRECTED me.

TO GO back six miles.

I ASKED if the boy.

WAS GOING back.

* * *

AND THE boy lived there.

AND ALL I had done.

WAS DRIVE him home.

I THANK you.

Proper Secrecy

DO YOU have a hard time to keep your personal plans and ambitions to yourself?

When you hit upon a plan or idea which is likely to benefit you is there an uncontrollable desire to tell someone?

Perhaps you have some of your best plans frustrated by someone, you know not whom.

Usually when you have thought it over, you realize that you told someone of your intentions, or at least intimated that you would do that certain thing.

Perhaps the one you told was a good friend, but he or she may have told someone else, and so on until the one who thwarted your plans possessed the knowledge of what you intended to do.

The greater your impulse to tell another of your plans the more necessary for you to keep silent about them.

The more elated you are over the outcome of some particular occasion the more reason there is for your having something that can be used with profit by another person.

You like to have someone to rejoice with you—to compliment you.

Carry out your plans before you divulge your intentions.

New York Day by Day

by O. O. McINTYRE

NEW YORK, Oct. 15.—A prowl about the shores of Manhasset Bay and Hempstead Harbor probably uncovers more celebrities than the entire lengths of Broadway and Fifth avenue. This is the theatrical and literary colony of Great Neck—called Goitre by smart crackers.

Along one shore will be found the homes of Raymond Hitchcock, Eddie Cantor, Arthur Hopkins, Gene Buck, Clarence Budington Kelland, Jack Hazzard, Neysa McMein, Jane Cowl, Max Figman and Leslie Howard. Most Great Neckers—a half hour from Broadway—live there the year around.

They thrill to this slightly remote rusticity. A stranger walking along the quiet streets may see one of his favorite figures hoeing in the garden, sprinkling the lawn, painting the garage, cutting grass or performing other simple tasks.

On the other shore side live F. Scott Fitzgerald, Lew Fields, Herbert B. Swope, Ring Lardner, George Cohan, Tom Meighan, Edgar Selwyn, Ernest Truex, Sam Harris, Ed Wynn, Frank Craven, Ernest Glendenning, Frances Alda, Jesse Livermore, Tad and Quinn Martin.

Across the sound on either shore of the Hempstead harbor the estates are a little more toney. Here reside W. R. Coe, Irving Berlin's father-in-law, C. Oliver Iselin, Solomon Guggenheim, Vincent Astor and many others with heavy purses. The late Marcus Loew lived there, too.

Most of these residents have backyard bathing beaches—known as outdoor bath tubs. Despite their apparent affluence, the village touch is pronounced. The local barber shop is the meeting place. Every home is equipped with a radio. And people rock on the front porch of evenings.

Croquet grounds are numerous and porch checker games are a common diversion. A census recently showed 90 per cent of the Great Neckers are of small town origin.

Wilton Lackaye has long been regarded as keenest of the Lambs Club wits. Quite often a newer generation of wise crackers attempt to unhorse the old master. They receive a verbal plop on the beezer resembling the resounding skush of the flying brick in the comic strip. The other evening one whose record on a sinking liner did not achieve a hero medal, became particularly annoying. He challenged Mr. Lackaye to billiards, chess and this and that and wound up with: "I can beat you at anything you suggest."

"Doubtless. Including a race for lifeboats," drawled Mr. Lackaye.

Broadway is now intent on curbing another polite gyppery, now that some progress has been made against theater ticket and couvert gouges. The guns are aimed this time at the table water prices in cafes and night clubs. These bottled beverages cost an average of 6 cents a bottle. They are sold anywhere from 60 cents to $1.25. In many hotels prices rise after 4 o'clock when the highball demand is heavier. The method is simple in the effort to reduce the price. Patrons are mixing highballs in plain water. An organization known as the Plain Water Club is, anyway, having more fun with the idea. Even if the cafe and hotel men cannot see the joke.

Sign on an Avenue A house: "Rooms for rent—with or without garage." Figure that one out.

A Broadway spy reports Al Jolson, after many years of singing mammy songs, went to California to have his knees lifted.

* * *

I often wonder how black-face comedians who smear themselves an ebony black nightly remove the stuff so quickly. I remember seeing a curtain drop on Jolson at the Winter Garden with his face and hands black as coal. Fifteen minutes later he came into a supper club, immaculately dressed and his complexion its usual color.

Safety

By DR. FRANK CRANE

Safety is one of the things that experience and old age are always preaching. And it is one of the things of which youth is most impatient. There is one job that I know of in which safety is a recommendation, and that is the banker's. Elsewhere we like a man that is willing to take a chance. Still for a Bishop or a King or a President or anybody like that, safety is the most outstanding qualification.

As I have pointed out before, however, the one position open for the hard-faced and hard-hearted man is a banker's. We don't want a good fellow or a good mixer to handle our funds.

At a recent meeting at Winona Lake, in Indiana, speakers declared that almost all of the drinking of liquor that has been talked about in colleges was not due to an appetite for strong drink, but to the appetite for adventure. Boys like to do what their elders tell them not to do. They want new experiences. Youth loves to take a chance, even when that chance involves possible disease or death.

The armies of all countries are made up of youth. War is the outstanding great adventure. There is a possibility of being killed, of course, but the thrill seems to be worth it in the minds of youth.

That is the reason that the citizenry of a country will rally in an army, but come forward like molasses in winter when there is a call for them to support the failing francs or the debilitated dollar. There is a lot more thrill in risking one's life than in risking one's money.

So long as there are laws there will be "fun" in breaking them. There will not be found wanting people who are willing to take a chance.

The element of the boy is in us all and Huck Finn will always be more popular than little Lord Fauntleroy.

The newspaper writers are ever anxious to poke fun at the man who plays safe and to glorify the man who runs risks.

People will always love to jump off moving trains, to make balloon ascensions, to speed up automobiles and to drink whisky, for the reason that these things are dangerous.

When Nietsche said we should live dangerously and build our house on the side of a volcano, he struck a very responsive chord in the heart of the average man, particularly the youth.

The Rhyming Optimist

By ALINE MICHAELIS

I Do Not Know

I DO not know just why, but yet, in spite of daily toil and fret, in spite of folly and regret of some dark mood, I sense a never-failing care that lies about me everywhere and whispers, when I would despair, that life is good. I do not know just how, but still, though much I lack in gifts of skill and in the never-bending will that must prevail, I feel that while I use my best of purpose, energy and zest for every struggle, every test, I shall not fail. There is no reason I can name that keeps alight this shining flame of faith, more dear than love or fame, and yet I know life is a coin not lightly spent and purpose with each act is blent, and so with spirit well-content my way I go.

THE LIFE OF THOMAS A. EDISON

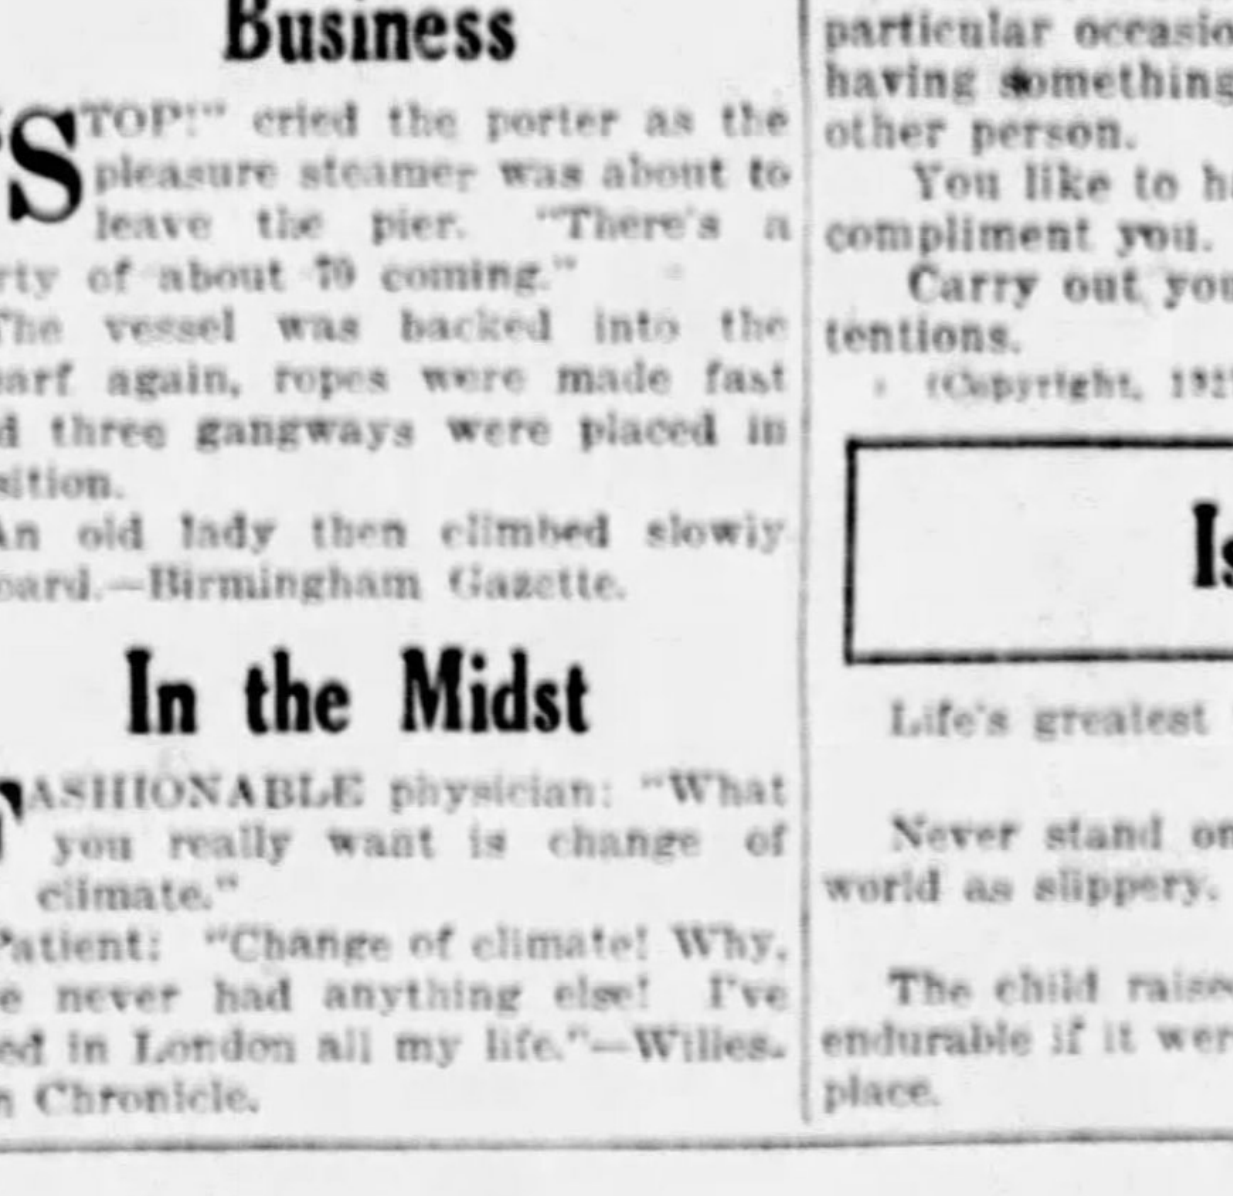
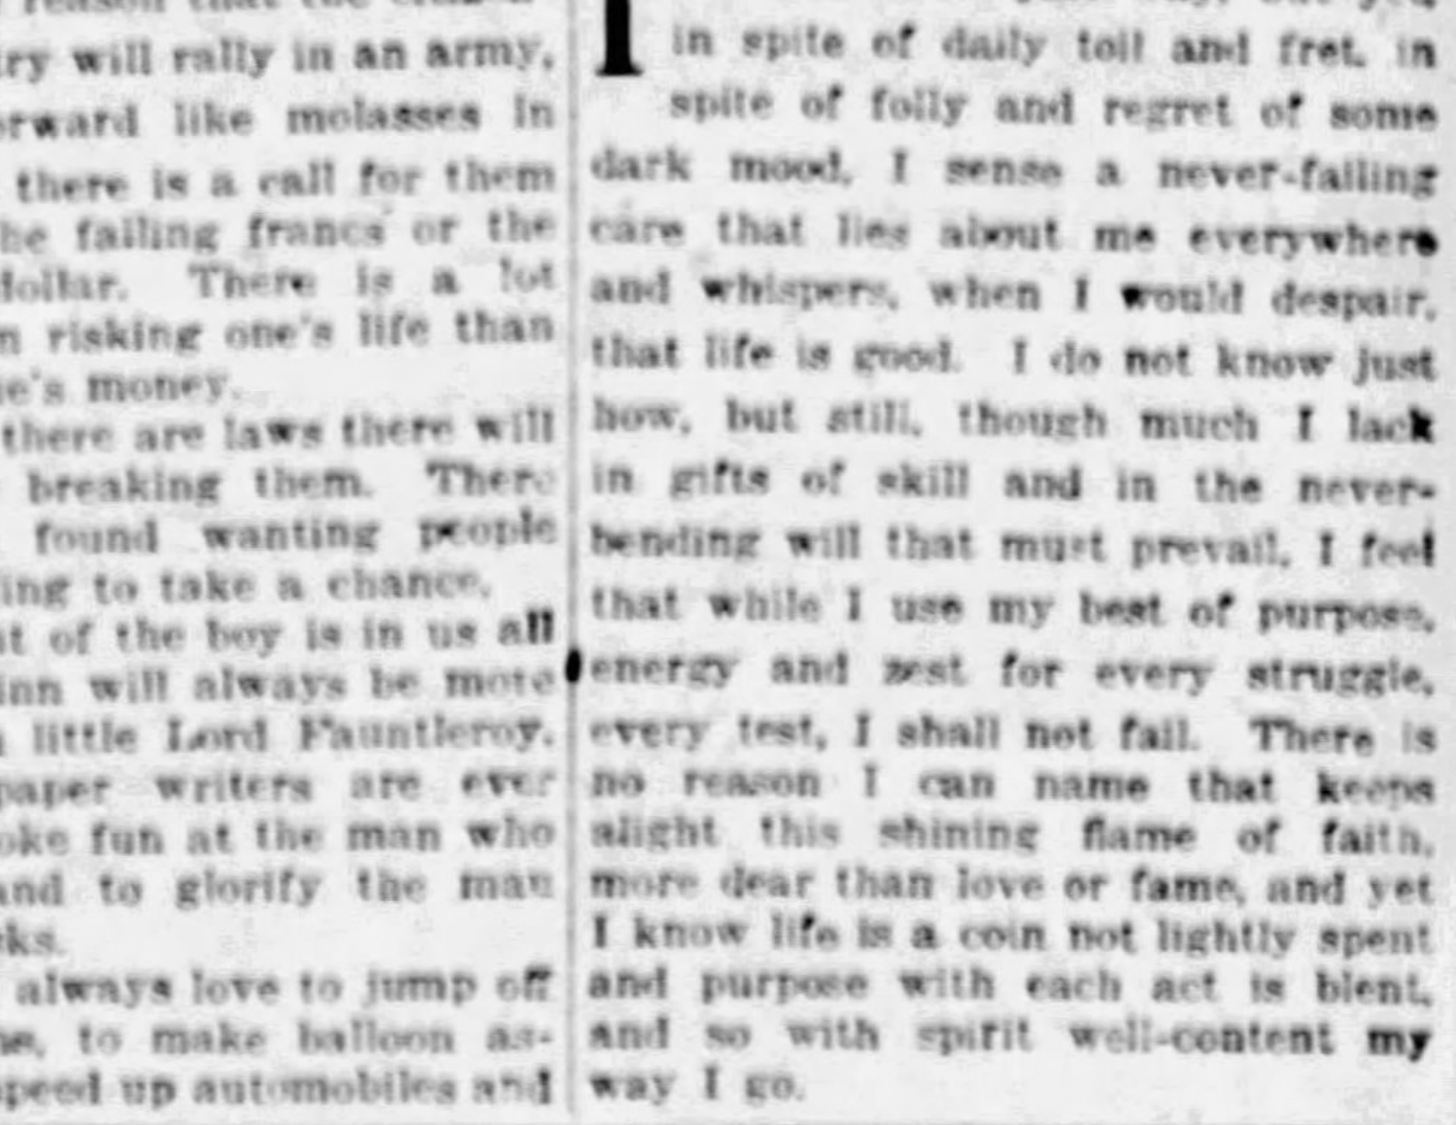
A POPULAR idea of Edison's method of inventing, and of inventing in general, is that it is a slap-dash process. "Presto"—and it's done! Nothing could be further from the truth. It's work, work, work against heart-breaking obstacles. In Edison's own words: "One per cent inspiration, 99 per cent perspiration."



EDISON'S painstaking methods are well illustrated by the following experience. He had rheumatism. He asked the doctor if all possible combinations of drugs had been tried to dissolve the uric-acid crystals that cause rheumatism. The doctor said, "I suppose not." Edison determined to make the test himself.

ON his return to the laboratory the great experimenter obtained a quantity of uric-acid crystals and put a few in the bottom of each of several thousand glass tumblers. Into each tumbler he poured a solution of every known drug. After three days he found that the crystals in five of them had dissolved.



HE threw all the other drugs away and took the ones that had worked to his doctor. "There," he announced, "are the drugs you ought to use for rheumatism." One of these is still chiefly used for the purpose. "To find out how to do a thing is to try everything you can think of," says Edison. (Continued Monday.)
